CASPIAN SEA (Mare Hyrcanum), an inland sea or salt-lake of W. Asia, and the largest of its kind known on the globe, between lat. 36° 40' & 47° 20' N., and lon. 46° 50' & 54° 10' E., enclosed by the doms. of Russia, the Kirghis, Khiva, and Persia. Length N. to S. about 700 m.; greatest breadth about 420 m., though the average does not exceed 200 m.; and in some places it is not more than 120 m. across. Estim. area 140,000 sq. m. Coast-line irregular, especially on the E. side, where are the gulfs of Mertvõi, Mangushlak, Kenderlinsk, Kara-bugos, & Balkan. Opposite the last, the penins. of Apsheron (celebrated for its naphtha), stretches into it on its W. side. The S. coast is almost unbroken, & bounded at a short distance by lofty mntns; its N. shores are low and marshy, or composed of sandy flats and broken into countless islets, especially about the mouth of the Volga. The Caspian contains several considerable isls., especially on its E. side. Depth of water along the coast is generally inconsiderable, and even at several miles from the shore it rarely exceeds 12 feet; but in the centre it varies from 120 to 300 ft., and in one place Hanway found no bottom at 480 fathoms. Its surface (supposed to be about 300 ft. lower than during early historical times, when this sea extended much farther E. ward), is now estimated to be 83½ ft. below the level of the Black Sea; and the difference is supposed to be augmenting by the decrease of the Caspian; a phenomenon, remarkable on account of the vast quantity of water which it receives from the Volga, Ural, Terek, Kmr, & other rivers, but due probably to its extens. evaporating surface. The water of this sea is not nearly so salt as that of the ocean. It has no tides, and in winter its N. part is covered with ice. Sturgeons, salmon, sterlets, and seals are abundant, & many active fisheries are carried on in this sea, the trade of which is nearly monopolised by Astrakhan, Guney, Kraanoi-yar, Derbend, Baku, Reshd, & Balfrush, are the other principal towns on its coasts. The Caspian was known to the Greeks and Romans. Herodotus derives its name from the Caspi, who inhabited its S. coast. It forms the chief means of communication betw. Russia, Persia, and Cent. Asia. The navigation is difficult. Steam-packets have now been estab. on it.

CASSAY, KATHEE, or MUNNIPPOOR, an independent country of Further India, mostly between lat. 24° and 26° N., and lon. 93° and 95° E., having N. the Naga territory (Assam), E. and S. the Burmese dom., and W. Cachar. Area estim. at 8,000 sq. m.; and pop. at 30,000. It consists of a valley about 2,500 ft. above the sea, inclosed by mntns., varying from about 6,000 to 8,200 ft. in height, and which are covered with dense forests. Surface of the lowlands fertile, but in many parts swampy, and scarcely 1-4th part is under culture. Its rivs. are tributary to the Barah or the Irawadi; the princip. is the Imphan-Toorel. Rice, tobacco, indigo, cotton, sugar, opium, mustard, and most of the kitchen vegetables of Europe are raised; in the N. the true tea-plant is abundant. An excellent breed of ponies, greatly prized by the Burmese as cavalry horses, is reared, and many are exported into Yun-nan, with wax, cotton, and ivory, the tribute of the hill-tribes. Cotton cloths, muslins, silk stuffs, and some iron wares are manufactured, & exchanged for other goods with the inhabitants of the neighbouring countries. The people are more nearly allied to the Hindoos than the Burmese. The upper classes profess the Hindoo faith, and Cassay may be considered the extreme E. limit of Brahminism. Government vested in an hereditary rajah, assisted by a numerous divan; and the political condition of the people appears to present a favourable contrast to that of their E. neighbours. Armed force about 3,200 men. Public revenue, mostly paid in kind, is valued at 8,330M. Principal town Munnipoor, under which name also the whole dist. is generally understood, Cassay belonged to the Burmese before 1826, but it was rendered independent by the treaty of Yandabo.

CASSEL, or KASSEL, Cassella, a walled city of Germany, cap. of electoral Hesse (Kurhessen), and chief town of the circ. of lower Hesse, on the Fulda, 26 m. N.N.E. Frankfurt on the Main, which occupied the great cent. table land of the peninsula, composed chiefly of tertiary formation, and elevated 2,300 feet above the level of the sea. In the 10th cent. this region was a country, of which Burgos was the cap.; at the commencement of the 11th cent. it was erected into a kingdom, and was successively extended by the addition of the kingdoms of Leon, Estremadura, and Andalucia. The marriage of Ferdinand, king of Aragon, with Isabella of Castile, in 1474, united under one sceptre all the Christian states of Spain, and the conquest of Granada, in 1492, led to the establishment of the kingdom of Spain. From the great importance of Castile, as the centre of the kingdom, the name of Castellians is often used to indicate Spaniards in general.

CASTILLE (NEW), Spain. CASTILLA-LA-NUÉVA, an old prov. of Spain, forming the S. portion of the anc. kingdom of Castile; its cap. was Madrid. It is now divided into the provs. of Madrid, Toledo, Ciudad-Real, Cuenca, and Guadalaxara. This region forms part of the central table land of Spain, bounded N. by the mtns. of the Sierra Guadarrama, and S. by those of the Sierra Morena, & traversed by several minor chains, which separate broad plains or valleys. Its rivs. comprise the upper courses of the Tagus, Guadiana, the Guadalquivir, the Segura, and the Xucar. Climate extremely dry and healthy. On account of the elevation of the surface, the winters are excessively cold. In summer the heat is great in the valleys. Winds are violent & very dry; & in summer the air is loaded with dust. Soil is generally fertile, but suffers much from drought; water is very scarce, often for several months in succession it does not rain, and the average annual fall for the table land is only 10 inches. Agricul. is in a very neglected state, yet grain is raised sufficient for consumption. Castile is nearly destitute of trees. Excellent pasture is obtained in the mountains in summer, and in the valleys in winter. Oil and wine abound in many parts of the prov. of the latter, the most celeb. is that of Val-de-Peñas, in the prov. Ciudad Real. Saffron, madder, lint, hemp, and fruit, are cultivated to a small extent. The rearing of cattle is an important branch of industry; horses are of an excellent quality, but not numerous; the sheep of the Sierras Cuenca and Molina supply the celebrated merino wool. The mtns. of the Sierra Morena afford the richest supply of minerals in the kingdom. The chief mines are those of Almaden. The prov. affords excellent marble and rock-salt, and contains numerous mineral springs. The principal manufs. are those of cloth, silk, cotton, and paper. The chief industrial estabs. are in Madrid and its environs. Grain and wool are the most important articles of export.

CASTILE (OLD), Spain. CASTILLA-LA-VIEJA, an old prov. of Spain, comprising the N. portion of the anc. kingdom of Castile, and forming the new provs. of Burgos, Valladolid, Palencia, Avila, Segovia, Soria, Logroño, and Santander. The S. portion of the territory is traversed by the Sierra Guadarrama, and the N. by the mtns. of Asturias, while in the centre the Sierra Occa separates the basins of the Ebro and the Douro. The climate is more moist than in New Castile, and is very mild in the plains. Timber is rare, except on the mtns.; the soil is fertile and yields abundance of grain in the plains, and wine, madder, oil, lint, and fruits are produced. Pasturage is excellent, and cattle and sheep are extensively reared. The merino wool of Segovia is considered next in quality to that of Leon. The mtns.

afford a rich supply of useful minerals, and there are many mineral springs. Manufs. are unimportant, cloth is still the principal, next to which are leather, paper, glass, & stoneware. Corn, madder, & wool are the principal articles of export.

CATANIA, Catana, a celebrated city and seaport of Sicily, cap. intend., on its E. coast, near the foot of Mount Etna, 31 m. N.N.W. Syracuse. Pop. (1836) 54,167. It has been repeatedly ruined by earthquakes and eruptions of Etna, but always subsequently rebuilt in a superior style. It has a noble appearance from the sea, and is internally very handsome, with regular and spacious streets paved with lava, of which material the numerous public buildings are constructed, the latter being faced with magnesian limestone and enriched with marbles. A natural mole of lava encloses the harbour. Principal edifices, the cathedral, rebuilt after the great earthquake of 1693, the senate-house, government pawn-bank, a benedictine convent of vast extent, and with a superb church, a large museum, &c., about 30 other convents and 50 churches, some of which are very magnificent, several charitable establishments, founding and lying-in-hospitals, and a Magdalen asylum. In a fine square, near the cathedral, is a statue of an elephant bearing an obelisk, believed to be a genuine antique. The university, founded in 1445, has an annual rev. of above 2,000*l.*, and its library and museums are open on holidays to the public. Catania has a college of arts and numerous private museums; it is a bishop's see, the seat of one of the 3 high civil and criminal courts in Sicily, and of inferior courts, and it is invested with various high privileges. It has extens. manufs. of silk fabrics, and of wares in lava and amber; besides which goods, it exports corn, macaroni, potatoes, olives, figs, raw-silk, wine, soda, manna, cantharides, & snow from Mount Etna. The harbour is not adequate to the importance of the city, but it is generally full of small craft. The remains of anc. Catana comprise an amphitheatre, hippodrome, theatre, odeon, naumachia, gymnasium, and various traces of temples, tombs, aqueducts, and baths; but much of its site and the vicinity of the city has been buried under successive streams of lava.

CAUCASUS, an extensive mntn. chain in Russia, between Europe and Asia, of which it forms the boundary by closing the isthmus which separates the Black from the Caspian Sea. It commences in a tongue of land called the peninsula of Taman, which separates the E. part of the sea of Azov from the Black Sea, in lat. 45° 10' N., lon. 36° 45' E., and runs S.E. in the direction of the coast to lat. 43° N., where it turns first E., and then S.E., till it terminates in the peninsula of Apscheron in the Caspian Sea. Lat. 40° 20' N., lon. 50° 20' E. Extreme length 750 m.; breadth 65 to 150 m. The culminating point of the chain, Mt. Elburz, in lat. 43° 20' N., lon. 42° 30' E., rises between the sources of the rivers Kuban & Terek, to an elevation of 17,796 ft. The next in elevation is Mt. Kazbek, in lat. 42° 50' N., lon. 44° 20' E., 16,000 ft., but the mean elevation of the other peaks is much less. With few exceptions, the mntns. are covered with perpetual ice and snow. W. of Elburz the chain decreases rapidly in height, & on the shores of the Black Sea it is only about 200 ft. in elevation. E. of the central mass it maintains a considerable elevation till it approaches the Caspian Sea. A contrefort, which leaves the central mass in lon. 44° E., runs S. between the rivers Kur and Rion, and connects the Caucasus with the mntns. of Armenia. On the S. the Caucasus descends gradually by a succession of terraces, while on the N. it is more abrupt and precipitous. The mntns. are not peaked, as in the Alps, but are either flat or cup-shaped. The existence of glaciers in the Caucasus is uncertain, and there are no lakes of importance; hence the region in general is not well watered. The chief rivers are, on the N. of the chain, the Terek and Kuban, the former of which flows E. to the Caspian, and the latter W. to the Black Sea; & on the S. the Rion, a tributary of the Black, and the Kur of the Caspian Sea. The climate is healthy although tempests are frequent, and the higher plateaux are exposed to burning heats in summer. The soil is remarkably fertile in the valleys, and the mntns. are covered with valuable timber; every species of grain is abundant, and is cultivated to a height of 8,300 feet, while the lower valleys produce cotton, rice, lint, tobacco, indigo, and wine. The auroch, a species of domestic ox, is still found in the mntns.;—the forests are full of fur-bearing animals, and all the rivers abound in fish. Formerly numerous herds of cattle were reared in the valleys. The greater part of the chain is of secondary formation, interspersed with volcanic rocks. The chain contains no active volcanoes, but is frequently visited by earthquakes. Minerals comprise copper, lead, iron, sulphur, and coal. All the passes between Europe & Asia are guarded by Russian fortresses; but the only one which has been rendered practicable for carriages is that from Mozdok to Tiflis by the valley of the Terek. The principal pass on the E. is that of Derbend. The Caucasus mntns. have been celebrated from the highest antiquity; the people who inhabit them have almost always maintained their independence, and though nominally subject to Kussia, many of the tribes still maintain a constant struggle against her authority. The principal tribes are the Circassians, Ossetes, Lesghians, Abasians, Georgians, Misheges, and Mingrelia. The Circassians and Georgians are considered the finest types of the human family, and the Caucasian race is the name by which the white population distributed over Europe, America, and part of Asia and Africa, is distinguished.

CAUCASUS, or the CAUCASIAN REGION, is the name given to those portions of the Russian empire situated near the Caucasus mntns. These are in Enrope Cis-Caucasia, comprising the provs. of Caucasus, Circassia, and Daghestan; and in Asia Trans-Caucasia, or the countries situated between Turkey, Persia, the Caspian & the Black Seas, and the range of the Caucasus mntns., comprising the provs. of Abasia, Mingrelia, Imeretia, Georgia, Shirvan, and Russian Armenia. The pop. of this region was estimated in 1837 at 2,000,000, but is sometimes reckoned at double that amount.

CAUCASUS, a prov. of European Russia, at the

between lat. 1° 50' N., and 5° 30' S., and lon.
119° and 125° E. It is of most irregular shape, consisting of 4 peninsulas uniting in a common centre (no point being further than 50 m. from the sea), from which they extend N.E. and S., separated by the bays of Gorontalo, Tolo, & Boni. Estimated area 73,000 sq. m. (Eart). Pop.
supposed to be between 2,000,000 and 3,000,000.
It is stated to be superior in beauty to any other part of the Archip. Surface greatly diversified, and well watered by 3 principal rivers and many smaller streams. The centre is mountainous, & of primary formation. Volcanoes exist in the N.
peninsula, and volcanic mntns. prevail in the S.

Mineral products gold, iron, salt. Extensive grassy plains in the low grounds. Timber is not generally plentiful, but in one part is a large teak forest. Princip. products rice, maize, cassava, tobacco, and cotton, with some yams, sago, sugarcane, and excellent breeds of horses and other live stock. The pop. is composed of several distinct races; the Turajas or Horafores of the centre being supposed the aborigines. The coasts are inhabited by the Bughis, a maritime commercial people. The Mohamm. Bughis are almost wholly employed in trading with other parts of the Archip.; they collect the native produce of its E. isls., which they exchange at Singapore for calicoes, iron, muskets, gunpowder, and British and Indian manufactures; they have also established flourishing colonies in Flores, Sumbawa, and other isls. While the men are absent on their voyages, the women manuf.
cloths and variegated mats, which are in considerable demand throughout the Archip. The Badjus, or "sea-gypsies," are a people constantly residing on board their vessels; they carry on an active trade with the Chinese, whose ports they visit with cargoes of cotton, birds' nests, tripan, sharks' fins, tortoise-shell, and pearl. Turtles abound on the coasts. Celebes is divided into about 13 indep. states, the most powerful being the confed. of Boni in the S. peninsula. In most of them the government seems to be a limited monarchy. The Dutch have possessed settlements here since they expelled the Portuguese in 1660. They divide the isl. into the gov. of Mangkasser, embracing the 2 S. peninsulas; the residency of Menado in the N.; and Ternate on the E. Their princip. establishments are Menado near the N.W., and Kema, near the N.E. extrem. of the island, both declared free ports in 1849,
and Mangkasser on the W. coast, near the S. extremity of the isl., where formerly stood the native town of Macassar. There is here good anchorage, and the harbour was made a free port in 1847. In 1811 the English took possession of these Dutch settlements, but they were again restored in 1816.

In a more limited sense the term is applied to the following republics, between lat. 8° and 18° N., and lon. 78° and 94° W., bounded on the E. & N.E. by the Caribbean Sea, on the S.W. by the Pacific, & S. by N. Granada.

States.	Area in sq. m.	Population.	Capitals.
Guatemala,	75,080	700,000	Guatemala.
San Salvador,	6,615	400,000	San Salvador.
Honduras,	66,214	300,000	Balize.
Nicaragua,	39,374	350,000	Leon.
Costa-Rica,	16,239	150,000	San Jose.
Total,	203,966	1,900,000

The greatest length from S.E. to N.W. is about 1,000 m.; breadth varying from 70 to 100 m. Its N. part extends between the British settlement Balize and the Mexican States. The S. part extends from the Gulf of Parita to the country lying between the Gulf of Nicoya & Rio de St. Juan, about 280 m. To this succeeds the plain of Nicaragua, 175 m. in length, & the same in breadth; the lake Nicaragua, which covers a considerable portion of the surface, being only 134 feet above the Pacific O. The country to E. of this plain is mntnous, some of the peaks being 7,000 to 8,000 ft. in elevation. The table-land of Guatemala extends from the Isthmus of Chiquimula to that of Chuantepec in Mexico, & extends into the peninsula of Yucatan. In some places this table-land is 5,000 feet in elevation; it descends very rapidly to the Pacific, but more gradually towards Mexico and the Atlantic. It contains 2 volcanic mntns., upwards of 12,000 ft. in elevation. The climate is hot and moist in the lowlands, where there are dense forests; but is milder and more salubrious on the elevated table-lands. On the coasts of the Caribbean Sea the rains are very copious. Earthquakes are very frequent, especially in the table-lands, & numerous volcanoes exist. Principal rivers, the Motagua, Rio Dulce, Rio Pochic, Chicsoi, Blewfields, San Juan, all of which flow N. or E. ward. Principal lakes, Nicaragua and Leon, through which a communication between the Atlantic & Pacific Oceans has long been projected. [PANAMA.] On both E. & W. shores there are many good ports. Below the elevation of 3,000 ft., indigo, cotton, sugar, and cacao are the chief crops; between 3,000 to 5,000 ft. the cochineal plant is abundantly cultivated. Maize is generally raised, but wheat only in the high table-land in the N. In some parts the chicozapote, a fruit yielding a great deal of nourishment, supplies in commerce the place of corn. Other products are coffee, tobacco, dragon's blood, mastic, various balsams and drugs, tamarinds, pepper, cassia, ginger, & vanilla; mahogany, cedar, logwood, and other woods for dyeing or building; with gold, silver, copper, iron, lead, zinc, &c. The country is very productive of the precious metals. Alcedo stated that from the mine of Tisingal (Costa Rica), as much wealth had been extracted as from that of Potosi in Peru. A good deal of bullion is smelted through Balize and the Mosquito coast into Jamaica. Horses, asses, goats, hogs, having been introduced by the Spaniards, are now very numerous; vast herds of cattle are pastured in the grazing farms of Nicaragua; and large flocks of sheep feed on the table-land of Quesaltenango, being reared almost wholly for their wool. Cattle and sheep breeding, are, with agriculture, the main occupations of the pop.; but the production of coarse woollens, cotton cloths, caps, hats, earthenware, furniture, cabinet-work, employs a good many hands, and the Indians weave mats of different colours, which are used as carpets. Principal exports are indigo, cochineal, bullion, sarsaparilla, dyewoods, hides, balsams, mahogany, and other timber, sugar, coffee, tortoiseshell, and cattle; and in 1835, the whole amounted in value to 3,788,000 dolls. Imports consist chiefly of cotton, linen, and silk fabrics, hardware, cutlery, earthenware, trinkets, wine, oil, spirits, and provisions; and in same year amounted in value to 3,560,000 dolls. In 1843, 3,886,705 lbs. of coffee, 1,229,437 do. of cocoa, and 5,746 tons of fustic, were comprised in the exports of Centr. Amer. to the U. Kgd., from which the confed. received cotton goods to the value of 3,619, and some other goods. The rest of the trade is chiefly with the U. States, W. India isls., Spain, and France; but, according to the most recent accounts, the commerce & agriculture of the whole region is in a most deplorable condition. The pop. consists of aboriginal tribes, of Europeans, and a mixed race. Several tribes live in an independent condition, without intercourse with Europeans, although those along the Mosquito shore consider themselves under the protection of the British. Each state has its own president, vice-president, senate, and assembly of deputies, who are chosen by electoral colleges. The cities and towns have each a municip. corporation, presided over by an alcalde. Spanish laws have been replaced by codes, modelled on those of the N. Amer. U. States. The established religion is Roman Catholic. Aggreg. public rev. of the States may be estimated at nearly 600,000 dolls., but the expenditure in most, if not all, exceeds the income. Columbus discovered this region in 1502; in 1527 it was made a Spanish capt. generalship, and it belonged to Spain until 1821, when Guatemala first declared its independence. The several states subsequently formed a confederation, which was dissolved in 1839. Many ruins of ancient cities, temples, &c., have been discovered in this region, and are supposed to be the architecture of the native population, previous to and at the era of the Spanish conquest.

Lat. of light-house, 43° 23' 48" N., lon. 3° 42' 16" E. Pop. (1846) 16,613. It is a fortress of the first class, defended by a citadel; princip. edifices, church of St. Louis, public baths, and library. Its harbour is spacious and secure, from 16 to 19 feet in depth, formed by two piers with a breakwater in front, defended by two forts, one on either pier. A broad and deep canal, bordered with quays and warehouses, connects the port with the lagoon of Thau, and accordingly with the canal du-Midi, and canals leading to the Rhone, by which means Cette has an extensive traffic with the interior. Imports comprise Benicarlo wine from Spain, for mixing with French wines for the English and other markets. Exports consist of about 36,000 tuns of wine, and 4,000 do. of brandy annually, with almonds, Montpellier verdigris, salt from adjacent salt-works, and syrups, liqueurs, soap, perfumery, and glass wares, the products of its own factories. In 1842, 573 vessels, aggregate burden 52,815 tons, entered; and 611 do., burden 69,757 tons, cleared out of the port to foreign countries; independent of which, Cette is the entrepôt for an extensive coasting trade. It has ship-building yards, and an active oyster and anchovy fishery, and is the residence of various European consuls. It is wholly of modern origin, having been founded by Louis XIV. at the base of the anc. Mons Setius (whence its name).

CEUTA, Septa, a seaport town of Africa, belonging to Spain, in Marocco, opposite and 17 m. S.S.E. Gibraltar. Lat. (Mt. Acho) 35° 54' 4" N., lon. 5° 16' 6" W. Pop. 8,200. The castle occupies the highest point of a mntn. (the anc. Abyla, and one of the Pillars of Hercules—the rock of Gibraltar being the other) at the extremity of a peninsula. On the narrow isthmus at the opposite extremity, is another strong citadel; and between the two is the town, with a cathedral, sev. convents, an hospital, a convict establishment, & schools. Centa has many points of resemblance to Gibraltar; it is well supplied with water, and, if properly garrisoned, would be all but impregnable. It is the chief of the Spanish presidios on the African coast, the seat of a royal court, and the residence of a military governor, and financial intendant. It was taken from the Moors by John, king of Portugal, in 1415, and has permanently belonged to Spain ever since 1640.

CEVA, Ceba, a town, Sardinian sta., Piedmont, div. & 26 m. E. Coni, prov. Mondovì, cap. mand., on the Tanaro. Pop. 3,862. It stands at the foot of a rock on which is a dismantled citadel. Manufs. of silk twist, & trade in cheese.

CEVENNES, Cebenna Montes, a range of mntns. in the S. of France, commencing at the Canal du Midi, W. of Carcassonne, and running N.N.E. to the Canal du Centre. They are divided into the

S. and N. Cevennes; the former, under the names of the Montagnes Noires, Espinouse, Garrignes, and Lozère, extend over 120 m. to Mt. Lozère, where the chain forms a group called Monts du Gèvaudan, which sends several contreforts to the N. and S. The N. Cevennes take the name of Mts. Vivarais, Lyonnais, Forez, and Charolais. The Loire, Allier, Lot, Aveyron, Tarn, Hérault, Gard, and other rivers, have their sources in these mntns., the S. portion of which contain many extinct volcanoes, and present many deep fissures in the higher valleys. The highest points are Mezin, 5,794 feet, & Lozère, 4,884 feet above the level of the sea. The Cevennes served as a retreat for numerous Protestant families after the revocation of the edict of Nantes.

CEVENNES, an old country of France which formed the N.E. part of the government of Languedoc, cap. Mende. It was divided into Gèvaudan, Velay, Vivarais, and Cevennes proper. The Cevennes proper is now included partly in the dep. Gard, and partly in Aveyron.

CEYLON (Singala, anc. Taprobana), an isl. of British India, separated from the S. entrance of Hindostan by the Gulf of Manaar; between lat. 5° 55' and 9° 48' N., and lon. 79° 55' and 82° E. Shape pyriform, with apex to the N. Extreme length from N. to S., 270 m.; greatest breadth 145 m. Area 24,664 m. Pop. (1842) 1,329,529 coloured, 35,010 white; total, 1,364,539; (1844) 1,421,661. The southern and central part of the isl. is elevated and mntnous., Adam's Peak rising to the height of 7,420 ft., and Pedro Tallagalla to 8,400 feet. The E. shore is bold and rocky, with deep water. The W. shore is uniformly low, and indented with bays and inlets. The N.W. part of the island is almost joined to the neighbouring peninsula by the small island of Manaar, from the W. point of which a sand-bank, only covered at high water, stretches to the isl. of Rameserum, a dist. of about 30 m. [ADAM'S BRIDGE], leaving open only two navigable passages, that between Manaar and Ceylon, which has not more than 4 feet water at ebb-tide, and the narrow passage of Paumbum between Rameserum and the mainland, which is 6 ft. in depth at high water. The isl. is chiefly formed of granite and gneiss, especially in its southern portions, while limestone and sandstone prevail in the more level parts of the northern plains. Dolomite is found in the interior, and hornblende rock forms the summit of Adam's Peak. Among the minerals are iron, manganese, plumbago, nitre, alum, and salt. The climate is hot and moist, though the temp. is not so high as on the neighbouring continent. The N.E. monsoon prevails from November to February, modified and interrupted by local circumstances; the S.W. monsoon from April to September. The E. part of the isl. is hot & dry, the W. temperate and humid; much rain falls, and rivers and streams abound. The largest riv. is Mahaveli Gunga, which has its origin in the highlands in the S., and flowing N.E. enters the Ocean at Trincomalé. In the highlands in the S., and on the central range stretching northwards, the temperature is much milder than in the valleys. The soil is chiefly a ferruginous quartzose and clayey mixture in the S., & sandy and calcareous in the N., with a small proportion of vegetable matter; yet vegetation is most luxuriant, and irrigation appears to have been anciently practised, from artificial tanks and lakes still existing. Rice, cotton, tobacco, indigo, pepper, coffee, and various vegetables are raised. The cocoa palm, Palmyra palm, talipot, tamarind, bread fruit, and cinnamon, are among the most useful trees; the last is cultivated to a great extent, but some recent attempts to cultivate extensively the sugar-cane appear to have failed. The zoology of the isl. is much the same as the neighbouring continent. Snakes and reptiles abound. Elephants are very numerous, especially in the N. and E. prov.; a European officer in two years killed 400. An extensive pearl bank of 30 m. length at Condachy, yields excellent pearls, & employs 2,000 divers for three weeks in spring. Little is known of the aboriginal inhabs. of Ceylon; at present they are similar in all respects to the Hindoos of the neighbouring continent, and consist of Singalese, inhabiting the interior and parts of the coast, Malabars, Mohammedans, Europeans, and Negroes. Ceylon was known to the Greeks in the time of Alexander, as also to the Romans. It was visited by traders in 6th cent., by Marco Polo in 13th cent., and by Sir J. Mandeville in 14th. The Singalese annals contain historical records for 24 cents. The Portuguese formed a settlement at Colombo in 1520. They were superseded by the Dutch in 17th cent.; and at the close of the 18th, the British, after various encounters with the Dutch and French, obtained possession of the stations on the coast; and finally, in 1815, at the invitation of the native chiefs, took possession of the whole isl. The government now consists of a governor and an executive council of 5 members, & legislative council of 8 members, & 6 unofficial members, natives or naturalized subjects, & proprietors or princip. merchants of the isl. The isl. is divided into 5 provinces & these into districts, each with an agent & assistant. There are a supreme court, provincial courts, and magistrates. The isl. was constituted a bishopric in 1846, with bishop and clergy of English church. There are besides clergymen of other denominations. Educational establishments have been formed chiefly by religious and missionary societies. In 1842 there were 39 government schools, with 60 masters and assistants. In the whole schools there were 20,703 scholars. Buddhism was almost the universal creed of the natives, and still remains so. The Singalese spoken language is peculiar to this isl., but their written language is either Pali or Sansorit. The British government have formed at great expense many excellent roads throughout the isl., and a canal and river communication exists between Colombo and Calpenty. The trade and commerce of Ceylon is of very ancient date, but it became circumscribed and hampered under the Portuguese and Dutch. The natives are ingenious workers in metals, and in manufs. of cordage, matting, and baskets. In 1842, 3,663 looms were employed in weaving table-cloths, handkerchiefs, napkins. There were 13 mines of plumbago, and 4,286 boats and rafts employed in fishing. Of the whole surface of the island, 760,821 acres were cultivated or in pasture, and upwards of 4 millions uncultivated. In that year were produced 6,717,990 bushels of paddy, 720,216 bushels fine grain, 1,254,263 lbs. coffee, 31,352,408 lbs. tobacco, and 1,032,883 lbs. cinnamon. Exports in 1843, valued at 422,424*l.*, of which 330,000*l.* was to Great Britain. Imports 1,029,515*l.*, of which 257,508*l.* was from Gt. Britain. Exports in 1846, valued at 570,200*l.*; impts. do., 1,464,787*l.* Salt manufactured from marshes, yielded in 1842 a government rev. of 31,222*l.* Public rev. in 1845, 450,000*l.* The chief towns are Colombo the cap., Kandy, Trincomalé, Pointe-de-Galle, Jaffna, Calpenty. Ceylon is now the central point for the oriental mail packets. The mail which leaves Southampton every month, via Alexandria, and the Red Sea, touches at Ceylon (aver. voy. 40 days), from whence issue one branch mail to Madras and Calcutta, and one to Penang, Singapore, & Hong Kong; another mail to Australia and New Zealand is contemplated.

Marne, in an open country, on railway (in progress) from Paris to Strasbourg, and on rt. b. of the Marne, here crossed by a fine stone bridge, 90 m. E. Paris. Lat. 48° 57' 22" N., lon. 4° 21' 42" E. Elev. 270 ft. Pop. (1846) 13,733. It is enclosed by old walls, & irregularly built, principally of timber, lath, & plaster.

Chf. edifices, the cathed., a large Greco-Gothic structure, mostly rebuilt in 1672; the town-hall & prefecture, both good buildings; the churches Notre Dame and St Alpin, the barracks, arch of St Croix, and a school of arts and trades, attended by about 450 pupils; pupils maintained here by the government, besides other students. Outside of the city is a fine planted promenade, termed the Jard. Chalons is a bishop's see, and has a diocesan school, a commercial tribunal, schools of geometry, design, &c., a botanic garden, a flourishing agricultural society, various scientific collections, a publ. library of 20,000 vols., and manufs. of woollen, linen, and cotton goods, with extensive tanneries, cooperages, and dye-factories.

Early in the Christian era it was one of the most important commercial cities of Europe, and under the Merovingian kings it is said to have had 60,000 inhabitants; since then its commerce and importance have greatly declined, but it still has an active trade with Paris and the neighbouring depts., in wine, corn, wool, hemp, rape-oil, & the products of its factories. In its vicinity, Tetricus was defeated by the troops of Aurelian; and Attila was vanquished by the Romans and their allies in the great battle of Chalons, A.D. 451.

CHALONS-SUR-SAÛNE, Cabillonum, a comm. and town of France, dep. Saône-et-Loire, cap. arrond., on r. b. of the Saône, at the commencement of the Canal du Centre, and on the railway (in progress) from Dijon to Lyon, 32 m. N. Mâcon. Elevation 584 feet. Pop. (1846) 15,937. It is well built; and a handsome quay, lined by good houses, stretches along the Saône, which here becomes navigable for the Lyon steam-boats. Principal structures, the cathedral, an edifice of the 13th century, St Peter's church, the town-hall, the hospice St Laurent, and hospital of St Louis, both large and well-managed establishments, a fountain with a statue of Neptune; and an obelisk to the memory of Napoleon, a fine granite column, a supposed relic of the Roman period. Chalons has a school of design, a public library of 10,000 vols., a college, a theatre, public baths, large glass factories, iron works, manufs. of watches, jewellery, linen, and other fabrics, & Esence d'Orient, prepared from the scales of Bleak, for the fabrication of false pearls. Being at the junction of several great roads, and connected with the Mediterranean, Atlantic, and N. Sea, by the Rhône, Saône, Loire, and several large canals, it is the centre of a considerable trade, and it exports a good deal of wine, timber, charcoal, iron, limestone, & agricultural produce to other parts of France. Chalons was cap. of the old divis. of Chalonnais, in the prov. of Burgundy, & here the famous Abelard died in 1142.

CHILE, or CHILL, a repub. state, S. Amer., situated along the W. shore of that continent, bounded by the Andes on the E., and Pacific Oc. on the W., extending from lat. 25° 20' to 43° 20' S., and between lon. 69° and 74° W. Length from N. to S., including isl. of Chiloe, 1,240 m.; breadth from 100 to 200 m. The boundary line separating it on the N. from Bolivia is near Huesco Parado, its southern limit on the mainland is the Bay of Ancud. The mountain slopes of the Andes form the greater part of Chile. They are here a single range except at two places, where they separate, and enclose the elevated valleys of Tunyan and Uzpallata. The volcanic peak of Aconcagua rises to an elev. of 23,200 ft., that of Maypu to 15,000 feet. There are several passes across the Chilean range, one in Aconcagua at an elev. of 14,000 ft.; at Portello, 14,365; & at Tunyan & Cumbre, 13,210 ft. North of the Rio Chuapa the whole country is formed by the declivity of the Andes, except a narrow belt of plain 60 to 80 ft. in elev., bordering the sea. The surface is very irregular, rocky, sandy, and almost barren & uncultivated, except a few spots on the banks of the rivers. S. of Rio Chuapa the country is more diversified. Hilly and sterile tracts occupy the middle of this space, but on either side are valleys and plains of considerable fertility. From the Rio Maule to the Biobio the land becomes more level, and is in general more fertile. The climate of Central Chile is hot and dry. In summer the thermometer rises to 90° and 95° F.; in the other seasons the air is more temperate, and the climate, on the whole, healthy. In spring and winter ice is sometimes seen even on the coasts. In some of the valleys, as Copiapo, years pass over without rain falling, but dews are frequent. Farther south showers are only occasional, sometimes at an interval of 3 years. In the vicinity of the riv. Biobio rain falls regularly in winter. South of this river the rains are irregular, but fall heavily. In spring the sky is cloudy, but for many months of the year it is clear and transparent. High gales, blowing in particular directions, are not unfrequent, and earthquakes occur very often, particularly near the coast. Snow falls on the summits of the Andes, and by its gradual melting, affords a supply of water to the rivers. The lower limits of the snow line are, N. extrem. 17,000 ft. in middle 12,780 ft., in S. extrem. 8,300 ft. The rivs. N. of the Maypu bring down to the coast little water. None are navigable. S. of lat. 34°, the rains are sufficiently copious to form considerable rivs. The Maule is navigable for vessels drawing 7 ft. water, and for barges for about 20 m. The Biobio, the largest riv. in the country, has a course of 200 m., and is 2 m. wide at its mouth, navigable for boats for 200 m., but too shallow for large vessels. The Calacalla riv. admits vessels of considerable size. There are no lakes of any importance in the low grounds, and few of any extent known in the Alpine region of the Andes. There are several good harbours, such as those of Valdivia, Concepcion, Valparaiso, and Coquimbo. The tracts through the valley and ravines are only passable by mules, and good roads and bridges are very much needed. The vegetation of the north of Chile is very limited. Tropical plants do not grow from the extreme dryness of the soil. Farther south Indian corn, wheat, barley, oats, beans, & hemp, are extensively cultivated, and melons, pumpkins, figs, grapes, pomegranates, oranges, peaches, apples, & olives are abundant. The S. forests also contain a variety of excellent timber trees. This is the native country of the potato. It is found growing in the arid mntns. of Central Chile as well as in the moist temp. of Chonos and Chiloe Isles. Among the animals of prey the puma is the most conspicuous, and is not uncommon. The guanaco and llama abound in the plains of the S. provinces, and the pastures feed large herds of cattle, horses, asses, mules, & goats. Jerked beef, tallow, hides, and live stock are exported. Gold is found in the sands of the rivs., and was formerly, though not now, collected. Silver mines exist in the S. Andes, but silver and copper mines are chiefly wrought in the more N. parts, lead and iron, are found, but are not wrought. On the river Biobio coal and lignite beds abound, and are partially wrought.

In 1830 the department of Coquimbo contained 103 mines, viz. 75 of copper, 24 silver, and 3 of gold, and from 1840 to 1841 Chile produced 252,752 cwt. of copper in bars, and 905,032 do. of copper ore, 430,066 marcs of silver in ingots and coin, and 16,590 do. of gold. The Pop. consists of the descendants of the Spaniards and the Aboriginal tribes. All the inhabitants of the Biobio are of European descent, with scarcely any mixture of Indian blood. The Aborigines inhabit almost exclusively the country south of this river. [ARAUUCANIA.] The present pop. is considered to exceed 1,300,000, exclusive of Araucania. Wealth and property are more unequally divided than in the states to the E. of the Andes. Some of the largest proprietors in the vicinity of the cities are said to possess annual incomes varying from 5,000*l.* to 10,000*l.* The gradations of rank are more strongly marked also, and the guaso or peasant here is not so independent a personage as the guacho of the eastern agricultural states. The religion is Roman Catholic. Chile is divided into 8 provinces.

In 1842, 339,019 tons of shipping entered the ports of Chile, and 328,228 departed. The customs and revenue are yearly increasing. For the year 1843 these amounted to 3,160,000 piastres (eq. to dollars). The British shipments to Valparaiso amounted in 1840 to 1,202,523*l.*

Chile was taken possession of by the Spaniards after the conquest of Peru, and a settlement formed at Santiago in 1541. In 1810 the struggle for independence against the mother country commenced and terminated in 1818 by the battle of Maypú and the formation of a republic. The government is vested in a supreme director, a senate of 20 members, and a house of representatives, to which a deputy is sent for every 15,000 persons. Chile is at present the best governed and most prosperous of the S. Amer. republics. A well organized militia force has lately been established, and the standing army has been greatly reduced. A single frigate and some smaller vessels constitute the navy. There are a university and lyceum at Santiago, and government schools and seminaries established throughout several districts. Santiago is the capital of the republic and the seat of government.

CHILE, a township, U. S., N. Amer., New York, 10 m. S.W. Rochester. Pop. 2,174.

CHI-LI, or PE-CHE-LE, the most N. prov of China, mostly between lat. 35° and 41° 30' N., and lon. 114° and 120° E., having N. Mongolia, E. the Gulf of Pe-che-le, and on other sides the provs. Shan-tung, Shan-se, and Ho-nan. Pop. (1825) 27,990,871. It is well watered, but is the least productive prov. of China-proper; and it owes its chief importance to containing the capital, Pekin, and the great depôts of rice and salt for the internal supply of the empire and of the cattle sent into China from Mongolia. Coal of inferior quality is raised in considerable quantities. The prov. is divided into 11 depts.; chief cities Pekin and Yung-ping.

CHI-LI, or PE-CHE-LE (GULF OF), an inlet of the Yellow Sea, betw. lat. 37° 10' and 39° 20' N., and lon. 118° and 121° E., commun. N. with the G. of Leao-tong, & E. with the Yellow Sea, bounded on other sides by the Chinese provs. Chi-li and Shan-tung. Length & breadth about 150 m. each. It receives the Pei-ho riv. on W., & the Chan-tou on N.

CHILICOTHE, or CHILLICOTHE, a town, U. S. N. Amer., Ohio, on the Scioto riv., & Ohio canal, 42 m. S. Columbus. Pop. 3,977. It consists chiefly of two broad and regular streets, which intersect at its centre; and it has several churches and inhabited houses, a court-ho., and a bank.—Other places of same name are in the states Missouri and Illinois.

CHILKA-LAKE, Brit. India, is a shallow inlet of the Bay of Bengal, between the presids. Madras and Bengal. Area 280 sq. m. Average depth some years ago was 4½ feet, but it was then decreasing. It has numerous peopled islands, and its banks are studded with hamlets, the inhabitants of which are empld. in extensive salt-works.

CHILKEAH, a town of British India, presid. of Bengal, Upp. provs., dist. and 70 m. N.W. W. Bareilly, and a principal mart of the trade between the British territory and Kumaon Tibet, &c.

CHILLAMBARAM, a town of British India, Carnatic, on the sea coast, 36 m. S. Pondicherry. In the vicinity are extensive anc. Hindoo temples.

CHILLAN, a town of Chile, province and 100 m. N.E. Concepcion, on river of same name.

CHILLENEN, a pa. of Engl., co. Kent, 3½ m. S.S.E. Wingham. Area 180 ac. Pop. 137.

CHILLESFORD, a pa. of England, co. Suffolk, 3 m. N.W. Oxford. Area 1,420 ac. Pop. 220.

CHILLINGHAM, a pa. of Engl., co. Northumberland, on the Till, 4½ m. S.E. Wooler. Area 4,980 ac. Pop. 459. The castle, seat of Earl of Tankerville, is a spacious Elizabethan structure; in the park is still kept a breed of wild cattle, or white Caledonian oxen.

CHILLINGTON, a pa. of Engl., co. Sussex, 7½ m. N.W. Steyning. Area 3,690 ac. Pop. 747.

CHILLINGTON, a pa. of England, co. Somerset, 3½ m. W.N.W. Crewkerne. Area 830 ac. P. 321

CHILLISQUAKE, township, U. S., N. America, Pennsylv., 65 m. N. Harrisburgh. Pop. 1,400.

CHILLON (CASTLE OF), a fortress of Switzerl., Canton Vaud, 6 m. S.E. Vevey, at the E. extrem. of the Lake of Geneva, on an isolated rock, surrounded by deep water, and connected with the mainland by a wooden bridge. It was built by Amadeus IV. of Savoy in 1238, and was long a state prison, but is now used as an arsenal. Bonnivard, prior of St Victor, was confined here from 1530 to 1536, and the place is rendered famous in Byron's "Prisoner of Chillon."

CHILMARK, a pa. of England, co. Wilts, 4 m. E. Hindon. Area 3,210 ac. P. 593. Fair, July 30.

CHILMARY, Chalamari, a town of Brit. India, presid. of Bengal, dist. and 40 m. S.E. Rungpoor, on the Brahmaputra, and at which from 60,000 to 100,000 Hindeos are stated to assemble at certain religious and commercial festivals.

CHILOE, an isl. on the W. coast of S. America, which, with several smaller isls., forms a prov. of the Chilean republic. It is separated from Patagonia by Gulf of Ancud, and extends from lat. 41° 40' to 43° 20' S., with lon. 74° W. It is 120 m. in length and 40 in breadth. Pop. (1832) 42,000, do. of prov. 44,000. The isl. is hilly but not mountainous, and densely covered with wood, except around the coast, where it is partially cleared and cultivated. The climate is temperate, but exceedingly moist—in winter almost incessant rains prevail, with frequent gales from W. to N.W.—the summer is warm, but the air frequently clouded and loaded with moisture; yet, on the whole, it is reckoned healthy. The soil is a rich sandy loam. The beech, cypress, laurel, and other trees grow in perfection. The chief products are wheat, barley, potatoes, apples, and strawberries; and cattle, sheep, and swine are reared in considerable numbers. The shores produce abundance of shell mollusks; and oysters, mussels, and pico (a barnacle), form a principal part of the food of the inhabitants. The population consists of natives, originally of Spanish descent and aboriginal Indians, but the great bulk of the inhabitants are a mixed breed. All are nominally Christians, but in general very ignorant and superstitious. The Indian language has become obsolete, and Spanish is that in general use. Agriculture is in a very primitive state, and the trade carried on is a species of barter, money being very scarce. The people are indolent and poor. Schools are general, but the teachers and priests are of a very illiterate grade. A coarse woollen cloth, dyed blue, is the principal local manufacture. Exports comprise provisions, timber, hides, brooms, woollens, to the annual amount of 25,000 dollars. The number of coasting vessels is about 1,500. Coal or lignite exists here, but is not wrought. Mines were formerly wrought, but are now given up. The island was discovered by the Spaniards in 1558. Castro, the ancient capital, was founded in 1566. San Carlos is now the chief town and port. This island was the last to throw off the authority of the king of Spain. The Chiloe Archipelago consists of upwards of 60 small islands, about 30 of which are inhabited, and several of which are well cultivated, and contain schools, &c. The prov. is divided into 10 dists., and is governed by an intendant and a provisional assembly, subject to the general government of Chile.

CHILPANZINGO, a town of the Mexican confed., dep. and 120 m. W.S.W. Mexico, on the road from Acapulco, and 4,800 feet above the sea.

CHILTEPEC, an arm of the river Tabasco, Mexican confed., leaves the main stream at San Juan Bautista, & after a N. course of 60 or 70 m., enters the Gulf of Mexico, 30 m. W.S.W. La Frontera.

CHILTEEN, two contiguous pas. of Engl., co. Wilts.—I. (All Saints), 5 m. E.N.E. Heytesbury. Area 4,500 ac. Pop. 403.—II. (St. Mary), Area 2,150 ac. Pop. 180.

CHILTERN HILLS, a range of chalk hills of Engl., co. Bucks, the S. part of which they traverse between Goring in Oxfordshire, and Tring in co. Herts. Breadth from 15 to 20 m. Height of principal summit, near Wendover, 905 feet above the sea. It is stated to have been formerly covered with a forest, some traces of which are extant, and it was notoriously infested with depredators, to suppress whose ravages the office of "stewards of the Chiltern hundreds" was established under the crown. The duties of the office are now only nominal, but the recognition of them is retained to enable members of the H. of Commons, by accepting them under the crown, to relinquish their seats in that assembly, which a member cannot otherwise do. There are 3 Chiltern hundreds, and the office is in the gift of the Chancellor of Exchequer.

CHILTERN-DOMEK, a pa. of Engl., co. Somerset, 2 m. S. Ilchester. Area 1,190 ac. P. 291.

CHILTON, several pas. of Engl.—I. co. Berks, 3 m. N. East-Isley. Area 1,500 ac. Pop. 309.

—II. co. Bucks, 3½ m. N.N.W. Thame. Area 2,080 ac. Pop. 364.—III. co. Suffolk, 1½ m. N.E. Sudbury. Area 1,090 ac. Pop. 98.—IV. (Can-tillo), co. Somerset, 3½ m. E. Ilchester. Area 540 ac. Pop. 134.—V. (Fohat), cos. Berks and Wilts, 2 m. W. Hungerford. Area 3,740 ac. Pop. 727.—VI. (Trinity), co. Somerset, N. Bridgewater. Area 1,250 ac. Pop. 74.

CHILVEHS-COTON, a pa. of Engl., co. Warwick, 1 m. S.W. Nuneaton. Area 3,730 ac. Pop. 2,509, mostly employed in ribbon-weaving. Annual revenue of free school and other charities of the Newdigate family, 250*l.* per annum. Arbury hall here, the splendid seat of this family, was erected out of the ruins of an Augustine priory.

CHILWELL, a hamlet of Engl., co. and 4½ m. S.W. Nottingham, pa. Attenbury. Pop. 772.

CHILWORTH, a pa. of Engl., co. Hants, 3½ m. S.E. Romsey. Area 1,400 ac. Pop. 177.—II. a chapelry, co. Surrey, 2½ m. S.E. Guildford.

CHIMALAPA, a vill. of Central Amer., state, & 55 m. N.E. Guatemala, in a rich and fertile tract, on the Motagua, and consisting, a few years ago, of about 90 huts and a ruined church.—The Chimalapilla river, is an affluent of the Coatzo-coalcos, Mexican confederation, dep. Tobasco.

CHIMALTENANGO, a town of Central America, state and 23 m. W.N.W. Guatemala. Pop. 4,000.

CHIMAY, a town of Belgium, prov. Hainaut, cap. cant., on the Blanche, 32 m. S.E. Mons. Pop. (1842) 3,041. It has a noble mansion and park, a college, several iron-works, and breweries, & near it are some valuable marble quarries.

CHIMBO, a town of S. Amer., Ecuador, on the Chimbo river, in the Andes, at the foot of Chimborazo mountain, and 50 m. N.E. Guayaquil. It has an active transit trade.

CHIMBORAZO, a celeb. mountain of S. Amer., and the culminating point of the Andes of Quito. Lat. 1° 30' S., long. 79° W., elev. 21,420 feet. It is in the form of a cone, and perpetually snow clad. This was long considered the culminating point of the Andes, and the highest mntn. in the world; it was ascended by Humboldt, 23d June 1802, to an elev. of 19,286 ft., and again by Bous-singault & Hall, 16th December 1831, to 19,695 ft.

CHIMERA, or KHIMARA, a town of European Turkey, Albania, on the Strait of Otranto, 22 m. N.W. Delvino, at the foot of the range of mntns. of same name, anc. Acroceramus, which terminates at Cape Linguetta, on the Bay of Avlona.

CHINA, a large and important country of E. Asia, constituting the princip. part of the Chinese empire. China proper extends betw. lat. 20° &

42° N., and lon. 98° and 122° E. Greatest length about 1,600 m.; breadth varies from 900 to 1,300 m. Having N. Manchuria and Mongolia, W. Tibet and other dependencies, S. the Burmese, Laos, and Anamese doms., from S.E. round to N.E. the China and Yellow seas. It is shut out from its N. dependencies by the great wall, constructed in the 3d century before the Christian era, and which extends over hill & dale for 1,250 miles, varies from 15 to 30 feet in height, and is strengthened at regular intervals by large square towers. This defensive barrier is now in decay. Estimated area, and pop. of the sev. provs. of China proper, are as follows:—

Provinces.	Area in sq. m.	Pop. (1825), according to an official census.	Chief Cities.
Chi-li,	58,949	27,990,871	Pekin.
Shan-tung,	65,104	28,938,764	Tsi-nan.
Shan-si,	55,268	14,004,210	Tai-yuen.
Hou-nan,	65,104	33,037,171	Kel-hung.
Kiang-si,	92,661	37,843,591	Ngan-king.
Ngan-hoei,		34,168,039	Ngan-chang.
Kiang-si,	73,176	30,426,999	Poo-choo.
Fo-kien,	53,480	14,777,410	Hung-choo.
Che-kiang,	39,150	26,236,784	Yeu-chang.
Hou-pe,	144,770	37,370,698	Chang-chu.

Yun-nan,	107,970	5,561,330	Kwei-yang.
Kwi-choo,	64,554	5,281,319
Total,	1,298,000	367,632,907

China, so far as Europeans have been able to ascertain, consists of an elevated region in the N.; a great alluvial plain in the centre, through which the Yang-tze-kiang and Hoang-ho rivers wind into the sea; and in the S. a region alternately undulating and interspersed with broad valleys and lofty mountains, which increase in elevation as they proceed W. ward. It is estim. that 2-3ds of the country are mountainous. Next to the great rivers already named, which rank amongst the largest in Asia, the Yun-ling flowing near Peking, and the Choo-keang or Canton river, are of the highest importance; the prov. Yun-nan is traversed by the main streams, or by considerable affluents, of all the great rivers of Further India. Lakes are both numerous and extensive; that of Tong-ting, in the prov. Hou-nan, is stated to be nearly 300 m. in circuit. The coast line has been estim. at 2,500 m. in length, and it is alternately bold and rocky, or low and swampy; it presents, however, many good harbours at the mouths of the rivers and elsewhere. In China the winters are colder, and the summers hotter than in the same parallels of W. Europe. Peking in the same lat. as Naples, has its average temperature 9° lower. In the southern prov., near Canton and Macao, the winter months are intensely dry and cold, March and April bring fogs and a milder temp. Much rain falls in May, and from July to September there is intense heat, with hurricanes, typhoons, and thunder storms. There are no active volcanoes in China Proper; but in sev. localities there are hot springs and emissions of gas. The vegetable productions of the country belong chiefly to the temp. zone. The tea plant is peculiar to this region, and the adjoining territory of Assam. The camphor tree grows to the height of 50 ft., and is a good timber tree; many lacker shrubs from which gum varnish is obtained, the croton sebiferum or tallow tree; an inferior sort of cinnamon tree, rhu-barb, ginseng, smilax, & other herbs, are common. Among the fruits are the China orange, the lichi, loquat, and wampee. The nelumbium, a large water lily, yields edible seeds, and the camellia, the olea fragrans, the tree peony, and the Indian chrysanthemum are among the most conspicuous flowers. The wild animals of China, if they ever abounded, have been long since almost extirpated by the cultiv. of the land, & the dense pop.; but the tiger is still known in the forests of Yun-nan, & wild cats in the forests of the S. The domestic dog is uniformly of one variety, of the spaniel size, and pale yellow colour. The deer family are now rare. Birds, include pheasants, quails, ring-dove, fishing cormorant. A few harmless reptiles still exist, and the locust frequently commits great devastations. Rice is the principal article of culture, and being the main food of the pop., its export is prohibited; wheat, barley, millet, & other grains of temp. climates are raised, especially in the N. & W. provs. where the climate is similar to that of latitudes much further N. in Europe, the cold being often severe. The density of pop. among other circumstances, has in many parts compelled the cultivation of every spot of ground at all capable of yielding produce for nutriment, and the mountain sides are often terraced and manured on principles of the strictest economy. The land is cultivated every where in small patches; a farm of 8 or 10 acres is considered large. Kitchen vegetables, oil plants of various kinds, and tobacco are almost universal articles of culture. Tea, the most valuable article of the foreign trade, & also very extensively consumed in China, is a product almost peculiar to this region. It is raised chiefly between lat. 25° and 31° N., on a tract extending from the coast inland for 500 or 600 m., and having an area of 350 to 400 sq. m., in the provs. Fo-kien, Ngan-hoei, Kiang-si, and Che-kiang. The soil on which it grows is composed of disintegrated granite and ferruginous sandstone. Of this article, it has been estimated that upwards of 72 million lbs. are annually exported into foreign countries, of which amount 52 millions are taken by the British empire, the other principal customers being Russia, the United States, the Netherlands, and Hamburg. In 1846, 56,503,000 lbs. were imported into the United Kingdom, and since the commencement of the present century, about 1,400 million of lbs. of tea have been sold in England, yielding to the British government an aggregate revenue of 167,640,000. sterling. The black teas are mostly prepared in Fo-kien, and the green in Ngan-hoei, both derived from one species of plant. The prov. Chi-li produces large quantities of salt and of coal, which, though of inferior quality, is especially valuable, owing to the general absence of timber or wood for fuel; in the S. eastern district lignite is also found. In Kan-su great quantities of tobacco are raised; in Che-kiang, silk is the chief article of produce, sugar in the S.; cotton, camphor, ginseng, rhubarb, & other drugs, numerous gums and varnishes, cassia, musk, the precious metals, gems, copper, tin, lead, mercury, arsenic, iron, and the finest porcelain clay, are among the principal products of the empire, the principal mines being in Kwi-choo & Yun-nan; live stock numerous only in the W. provs. Manufacts are of the most varied, and often of the most exquisite description. Chinese porcelain, silks, embroidery, and lacquered wares are unequalled for brilliancy, richness, and durability; and in carved goods in tortoise-shell, ivory, horn; in engraving, the manufs.

of paper, ink, cabinet-work, the Chinese abundantly testify their ingenuity & talent for imitation. They excel also in ship-building and bell-casting, and are apt in all branches of art conducive to the comfort of life; but all their manufs. are carried on without any aid of machinery. The traffic, in the E. provs. especially, is conducted chiefly by water, and among the most remarkable of the national works for this purpose, is the Grand Canal, extending from Hang-choo-foo, N. for 700 m. to the Yan-liang riv. The W. provs. import rice and other grains from the E., in return for metallic and some other products. From Tibet, China imports coarse woollens, gold bullion, Indian piece goods, shells, rhinoceros' horns, feathers, in return for silks, porcelain, English broad cloths, pearls, coal, & large quantities of tea. A considerable trade is carried on with Nepaul, Bootan, and Kumaon, the exports to which comprise borax, salt, and woollen goods; the returns being in grain, mole skins, tobacco, and Indian rupees. Caravans go frequently from China to Yarkand, and other parts of Chinese Turkestan, with tea & various manufs., and bring back cattle and raw silk. The overland trade with Burmah is extensive; Bhamo, in the Burmese dom., is its principal seat, where a large annual mart is held for many months during the year. The trade with Russia is wholly conducted at Kiachta (which see), on the Mongolian frontier, where Chinese raw and manufd. silks, porcelain, rhubarb, sugarcandy, musk, and especially tea, are exchanged for furs, sheep and lamb skins, and woollen goods. We are unacquainted with the extent of the trade between China & Mongolia, Manchooria & Corea; but with the last-named country there is certainly no extensive intercourse. From Leao-tong, on the N. frontier of the prov. Chi-li, wheat, cotton, and drugs are received in return for coarse manufd. goods. The marit. trade is by far the most important; and many years ago Mr Crawford estimated the commercial shipping of China at 70,000 tons, and that of Hai-nan at 10,000 tons, engaged in trading to Siam, Anam, Japan, and the Asiatic Archipelago. From 70 to 80 junks also leave Siam in the summer with grain, sugar, japan wood, betel-nut, zinc, ivory, gamboge, and take back flour, pease, cured mutton, and other provisions. Gold, ebony, tin, edible birds' nests, shark fins, sea-slug, pepper, and various condiments are imported from the archip.; the Canton trade with the Strait of Malacca is stated to employ a capital of about 1,250,000*l.* sterling; and the exports from Singapore to China in 1840-1 were estimated at 2,892,872 dolls. in value, of which British cotton goods formed a considerable part. The total marit. export and import trade of China with Europ. nations (Russia excepted), and with the U. States in 1845, has been estimated at 9,669,668*l.*, that with Gt. Britain & British India amounting to 6,814,062*l.*, and with the U. States to 2,265,885*l.*, the rest being with Portugal, Holland, Germany, Sweden, Denmark, and France. The opium exported from Calcutta to China in 1844-5 (independently of that exported from Bombay), amounted to 18,792 chests, worth 2,439,430*l.*, this being still a principal import into China, the trade being tolerated, though not legalised. The emperor is of a Manchoo dynasty, which conquered China in the 17th century; and the large property of the great offices of state are held by Manchoo Tastaos. The government is despotic, and is conducted under the emperor by an "inner" or privy council, a general council; the 6 supreme boards of civil office, revenue, rites, war, punishment, and public works; a censorate, high courts of memorials & appeals, and the imperial college which regulates every thing relating to literature & science. The last is a most important engine of Chinese polity, literary acquirements being a chief step to advancement in the public service, and schools being universal. The code of laws is reckoned good, and the administration of these on the whole mild; but the slavish subjection in which the administrators are held, and a system of organised espionage on the functionaries, leads to deceit and bribery throughout all the offices of governments. The provs. are subdivided into what we may call departments, arrondissements, and districts, or foo, ting, choo, and heen, which titles are respectively affixed to the names of their cap. cities and towns. The metropolitan prov. Chi-li, for instance, which is about as large as England and Wales, consists of 11 foo, 3 ting, 17 choo, & 174 heen dists., all under special governors, besides which officers, a tsungtuh or governor-general has usually authority over two or more provs. The standing military force, according to Teinhoussie, consists of 4 national divisions—the Manchoo in 678 companies of 100 men each; the Mongols in 211 companies, and 106,000 Chinese, all cavalry; and 500,000 native infantry, besides 125,000 irregular troops or militia—in all 829,900 men. Besides these, many troops are stationed in the provinces of Mongolia, Turkestan, Tibet, where the government is military, and in all considerable cities there is a garrison of Tartar troops. Since the termination of the contest with England, it is stated that large quantities of military stores have been purchased from the Americans and others, and that the coasts have been newly fortified with great care.

In physical character the Chinese rank under the Mongolian family of man; the harsher features of this family being considerably softened. The head and face are square-formed, or angular—the nose flat, lips thick, and eyes small, with oblique eyelids, cheekbones prominent. Colour of skin lemon yellow, hair black, beard scanty. While young, both males and females are frequently good-looking, but after 20 the features gradually assume a harsh and ugly appearance. The absurd practice of retarding the growth of the foot in females, which is confined chiefly to the upper ranks, renders these all lame, and comparatively incapable of active exertion. The Chinese intellect is shrewd, and takes a common sense view of things, not apt to be imaginative or speculative. The disposition is mild and peaceful, but deceitful; filial affection, and parental reverence are cultivated, but deliberate infanticide, practised on motives of expediency, shows a low state of moral feeling. At a very remote period, the natives appear to have advanced to a considerable state of civilization, and to the practice of the arts of domestic life, especially the arts of printing, the invention of the mariner's compass, and the manufacture of silk and porcelain; but here they have paused, and their government and institutions tend not to the further progress of improvement. The Chinese language is monosyllabic, and their letters express words & ideas; the roots or original characters amounting to 214. The fine arts have made no great progress; and though education in reading and writing is common, yet they have no pretensions to learning or science. The religion of Confucius is that adopted by the court and upper classes, and consists in a refined deism, with a great reverence for ancestors, and for the moral precepts of Confucius. Buddhism is the religion of the great mass of the people in China—proper, Manchouria, Mongolia, and Tibet, which last country is its head-quarter, being the seat of its most sacred Llamas. The Taou religion is that next in importance, as respects the number of its votaries. Mohammedans are said to be numerous in China, especially in the prov. Shien-si; and in Chinese Turkestan they form the majority of the pop. Roman Catholics & Jews form a comparatively insignificant proportion of the pop.; of the former there are estimated to be 320,000. The political influence of China extends considerably beyond the territorial limits of her empire, and it is customary for embassies to be sent at stated times, generally from two to five years, from many surrounding countries, with presents to the emperor; other presents of at least an equal value being given back in return. The Chinese court affects to consider the complimentary gifts from foreign states as so much tribute, and in this sense they enumerate Anam, Siam, Burmah, the Laos, Soclo, Holland, and even Great Britain, as tributary nations. The rule, however, of the present Tartar dynasty, even in the heart of its own dominions, is held by a very uncertain tenure; the Meaon-tu tribes in the S.W. provs. of China, & supposed to be their original inhabs., have repeatedly risen in rebellion; secret societies, the principal of which is called "the Triad," and which has for its object the restoration of a native dynasty, are said to be rapidly extending; and the finances of the empire are believed to be in a very unsatisfactory condition, in spite of a revenue, officially stated to amount to 191,804,139 taels, or about 63,934,173*l.* annually. The native records of China ascend as far back as B. C. 2204; and however fabulous their early portion may be considered, there is no doubt that China is the oldest existing dominion on the globe. Some scattered notices of this empire appear in the works of middle-age travellers; but Marco Polo was the first among the moderns to give a detailed account of China, the commencement of direct European commerce with which dates only since the discovery of the passage round the Cape of Good Hope. The first attempt of the English to open a trade with China was made in 1637, when 4 merchant vessels arrived at Macao, but through the intrigues of the Portuguese there established, the enterprise failed. Afterwards, the East India Company carried on some small traffic at the different maritime ports, & chiefly at Canton. In 1792 Lord Macartney's embassy attempted to put the trade on a more liberal basis, but with little success. In 1816 Lord Amherst's mission for a similar purpose, also failed of success, though the English trade continued pretty quiet and steady for the next 20 years. In 1834 the exclusive trade of the East India Company with China terminated, and the country was thrown open to general traders. Still the trade with foreigners was refused to be recognised by the government of Pekin, and numerous petty annoyances were continually occurring, till at last in 1839, the Chinese government forcibly obliged the English merchants at Canton to deliver up 20,283 chests of opium, which having been destroyed, and compensation refused, war was declared by England, and the coasts of China were blockaded by a British naval force, amounting in 1842 to 37 ships, mounting 784 guns, and manned by 7,069 men. After a series of successes, a peace was concluded at Nankin, Aug. 29, 1842, by which European merchants and a British consul were allowed to reside at the ports of Canton, Amoy, Foo-chow, Ning-po, and Shaug-hai; the isl. of Hong-Kong was ceded to the English in perpetuity, and 6 million dolls. were agreed to be paid by 7 instalments, as indemnity for the opium destroyed in 1839; 3 million dolls., as the amount of debts due by insolvent Hong merchants; & 12 million, as indemnity for the expenses of the war. In 1847, fresh outrages on the part of the people of Canton, led to another temporary capture of the Bogue Forts, and a new convention. The Chinese empire comprehends China-proper, Manchouria, Mongolia, Chinese Turkestan, Tibet, Hai-nan, Corea, adding to the pop. perhaps 8 or 10 millions. But though most parts of this empire are undoubtedly densely populated, the estimates of their amount greatly differ, and are all probably very vague. In addition to the statements above, we may add that Grossier in 1743, estimated the pop. at 200 millions; Balbi estimates the pop. at only 170 mill.; Lord Macartney at 333 mill.; a Chinese census of 1812, gives the amount at 360 mill.; do. of 1825, 367 mill.

CONGO, an extensive but little known country of W. Africa in S. Guinea. It was formerly understood to comprise all the countries between the equator and lat. 18° S., and is now divided into 4 principal parts, viz., Loango, Congo proper, Angola, and Benguela. Congo proper is separated from Loango on the N. by the riv. Zaire, S. from Angola by the Dande, and is bounded W. by the Atlantic, and E. by the countries of the interior, cap. Banza, called by the Portuguese San-Salvador. Climate hot and pestilential on the coasts, temperate and more healthy in the mountain districts of the interior. Rainy season from Feb. to April, when fever is prevalent. Soil very fertile and well cultivated in the interior, which is believed to be very populous. Chief products, rice, maize, sugar, tobacco, and pepper. The animals, which resemble those of the other countries of Guinea, comprise the lion and elephant. The government of the different states of Congo is despotic. The Portuguese, who discovered Congo in 1486, long held it in vassalage chiefly through their missionaries, but their authority is merely nominal.—[See for the latest account of Congo Ferd. Hoefer in l'Univers. Pittor. Afrique, t. 5. Paris, 1848.—See also ANGOOLA, BENGUELA, LOANGO.]

CONLIE, a comm. & mkt.-town of France, dep. Sarthe, cap. cant., 12 m. N.W. Mans. Pop. 1,627.

CONNAUGHT, the most W. and smallest of the 4 provs. of Ireland, bounded on N. and W. by the Atlantic, E. by Ulster and Leinster, and S.E. by Munster. Greatest length from S. to N., 86 m.; greatest breadth, 81 m. Area 4,392,000 ac., of which about 2 millions are arable. Pop. 1,418,859. The W. portion is broken up into numerous peninsulas, the largest of which is Connemara, and numerous isls., as Achill, Innisbegil, Clare, Innisboffin, Arranmore, &c. The numerous bays and sounds afford commodious harbours. The W. part of the prov., including the isls. is mountainous, the elevation in many parts amounting to 2,000 feet, forming highly picturesque scenery. The N. & S. extremities are also elevated, while the centre forms one level plain. The chief rivs. are the Bonnet, Uncion, Arrow, Moy, Clare, the Shannon forming the E. boundary. Chief lakes, L. Conn, 10 m. in length, Corrib, Mask, Carra. Granite and primary rocks form the northern part, commencing at Galway Bay; Silurian strata extend W. of Lochs Corrib & Mask, to this succeeds old red sandstone. The centre & eastern parts are composed of limestone, & coal is found in Lough Allan dist. The prov. is divided into the cos. Mayo & Galway on the W., & Sligo, Leitrim, and Roscommon on the E. Chief towns, Galway, Roscommon, Sligo, Carrick, Castlebar, Tnam, Ballinasloe, and Athlone. Number of national schools in 1842 was 272, attended by 31,600 pupils. Connaught was formerly a kgd. of the Irish heptarchy, and ruled by the O'Connors; and in 1590 was divided into cos. and came under English administration.

CONNAUT, a tnshp. of U. S., N. Amer., Ohio, on Lake Erie. Pop. 2,642. It exports timber and provisions.—Also two tnshps., Pennsylvania.

CONNECTICUT, one of the smaller states of the E. U. S., N. Amer., mostly between lat. 41° and 42° N., and lon. 72° and 73° 50' W., having N. Massachusetts, E. Rhode Island, W. New York state, & S. Long-Island Sound. Area 4,674 sq. m. Pop. (1850) 370,791. Surface undulating; mntinous. in the N. Principal rivers, the Connecticut, Housatonic and Thames. Principal harbours, those of Newhaven and New London. Soil more fitted for grazing than tillage, and large herds of cattle are reared; principal products, butter, cheese, wool, maize and European grains, flax, hemp, tobacco, apples, and cider. Mineral products comprise iron, plumbago, marble, and freestone. Cotton and woollen fabrics, hardwares, hats, leather, fire arms, and other goods are made in considerable quantities; and in 1840, the capital employed in manufs. was estimated at 13,669,139 dollars. Farmington canal is in this state, and it has 80 m. of railways. Exports, chiefly of provisions and rural produce to other parts of the Union and to the W. Indies, in 1843, amounted in value to 307,223 dollars; value of imports in same year, 230,841 dolls. Reg. shipping 31,415 tons. It has 3 colls., & publ. education is more diffused than in any other state of the Union. There is no public debt. Principal towns, Hartford, the cap., Newhaven, Middletown, New London, and Norwich. Connecticut sends four representatives to congress. The gov. of the state is vested in a governor, lieut.-governor, who is president of the senate (limited to 24 members), & a house of representatives.—The Connecticut river, the largest in New England, rises on the N. border of New Hampshire, separates that state from Vermont, traverses Massachusetts & Connecticut, and enters Long-Island Sound, 30 m. E. Newhaven, after a S. course, estimated at 410 m. The towns Hanover, Windsor, & Hartford are on its banks; to the last of which it is navigable from the sea, a distance of 50 m. It has valuable shad fisheries. Its W. branch forms the boundary between U. States and Canada to lat. 45° N.

CONNELL, a small barony and two pas. of Ireland, on the Liffey.—I. (Great), Leinster, co. Kildare, comprising the town of New-Bridge (which see). Area 4,848 ac. Pop. 2,212.—II. (Old), Munster, co. Kildare, 4½ m. W.S.W. Naas. Area 3,987 ac. Pop. 745.

CONSTANCE (LAKE OF), German Bodensee, anc. Brigantinus lacus, a lake of Europe betw. Switzerland and Germany, traversed from E. to W. by the Rhine. Length 42 m.; extreme breadth 9 m.; elev. above the sea, 1,250 feet; depth 964 feet. Its shores are bounded S. by Switzerland, S.E. by Anstria, N.E. by Bavaria and Württemberg, and N.W. by Baden. Near Constance it separates into 2 branches, Unter see (lower lake) on the W., and Ueberlingen see (lake of Ueberlingen) on the N.W. of Constance. The principal part of the Boden-see communicates with the Unter-see only by a narrow channel traversed by the Rhine. The waters of the lake are subject to rise and fall suddenly, without apparent cause; this phenomenon is called ruhs. The shores of the lake, which are in general flat, are very fertile. It is regularly traversed by steam packets. Principal affls. besides the Rhine, the Aach & Argen on the W. Chief towns on its shores, Constance, Bregenz, Lindau, Mörsburg, and Ueberlingen.

CONSTANCE (German Konstanz, anc. Constantia), a fortified city of the Grand Duchy of Baden, cap. circ. Lake, on the S.W. shore of the Lake of Constance, at the influx of the Rhine, 35 m. N.E. Zurich. Pop. with suburbs (1846) 6,379. It is highly picturesque in its architecture. Chf. edifices, a magnificent cathed., founded in the 11th century; the Kaufhaus, in which the famous council of Constance sat from 1414 to 1418 (and which deposed three anti-popes, and condemned Huss and Jerome of Prague); an anc. palace, a grand ducal residence, various conventual establishments, and a theatre. One of its suburbs is connected with it by a long covered bridge across the Rhine. It has manufactures of cotton goods, watches, and silk fabrics. Market gardening, & navigation occupy many of the inhabitants. It was annexed to the Austrian dom. in 1549, and to Baden in 1805.

CONSTANTIA, a tnshp., U. S., N. Amer., Oswego co., New York. Pop. 1,476.

CONSTANTIA, a vill. of the Cape Colony, South Africa, at the E. base of the Table mntn., 12 m. S. Cape Town, celeb. for its wine, which, next to Tokay, is reckoned the best liqueur known.

CONSTANTINA, a town of Spain, prov. and 40 m. N.N.E. Sevilla, near the Sierra de Constantina. Pop. 6,986. It is defended by a strong castle which was repaired by the French. Near it are some argentiferous lead mines.—The Sierra de Constantina, between Andalusia & Estremadura, is connected E. with the Sierra Morena, & gives rise to the Ardilla, affl. of the Guadiana, and the Huelva, affl. of the Guadalquivir.

CONSTANTINE, Cirta, a fortified city of Algeria, cap. prov. of same name, on a detached height, surrounded on three sides by ravines, one of which is crossed by an anc. Roman bridge. Lat. 36° 22' 21" N., lon. 6° 37' E. Pop. (1847), excl. of fortress, 20,822, of whom 1,919 were Europeans. Mean temp. of year 63° .5; winter 61° .9; summer 74° .7, Fahr. Houses mostly of brick, raised on stone foundations. It has a public school and hospital, Roman remains, & a citadel on the site of the anc. Numidian fortress, with manufs. of saddlery, and other leathern goods, an export of corn to Tunis, & an active trade with the country S.ward, in the products of Central Africa. It was taken by the French, 13th October 1837.

CONSTANTINE, a pa. of England, co. Cornwall, 6 m. S.W. Falmouth. Area 8,470 ac. Pop. 2,042.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Stamboul, the cap. city of the Turkish, as formerly of the Byzantine, or Lower Roman, empire, near the E. extremity of European Turkey, separated by the Bosphorus from Asia Minor. Lat. of St Sophia's 41° 0' 16" N., lon. 28° 59' 14" E. Pop. uncertain, but estimated at 400,000, including its suburbs Galata, Pera, Tophani, &c., composed of 150,000 Greeks & Armenians, 20,000 Europeans, & 60,000 Jews, and the remainder Turks and Arabians. The city proper occupying a triangular promontory of land between the Bosphorus & its inlet the "Golden Horn," is about 3½ m. in length N.W. to S.E., by from 1 to 4 m. in breadth, enclosed by a triple range of walls 12½ m. in circ., and entered at present by 28 gates. The city is built on an undulating declivity, highest on the land side. Externally it has an imposing appearance with its mosques, cupolas, and minarets, interspersed with cypresses, and its port crowded with shipping; but internally it consists mostly of a labyrinth of crooked, ill paved, and dirty lanes, and a crowd of low built and small houses, formed of wood or roughly hewn stone. Its drainage is favoured by its uneven site and a great number of public fountains, which amply supply the city with water brought from artificial tanks constructed at some distance. A great number of dogs are permitted to range the streets, which act as scavengers. They have no private owners, but belong to the community. Each ward has its own particular dogs, and should an individual trespass upon a neighbouring territory, he is immediately driven off by the dogs that occupy it. The Climate is variable, and the temp., especially in winter and spring, subject to great vicissitudes, snow and hard frost alternate with mild weather. The mean temp. of year, 56° -3; winter, 40° -8; summer, 71° -2, Fahr. The annual quantity of rain which falls is moderate. This capital, including its suburbs, contains 14 royal and 332 other mosques, 40 Mohammedan colleges, 183 hospitals, 36 christian churches, several synagogues, 130 public baths, and 180 khans or ius, besides numerous bazaars, coffee houses, and caravanserais. The extreme point of the city on the E. is occupied by the "seraglio," or private domain of the Sultan, the boundaries of which are supposed to have been those of the anc. Byzantium. It comprises an area about 3 m. in circ., separately enclosed by walls and extending down to the sea of Marmara. Its surface is "irregularly covered with detached suites of apartments, baths, mosques, kiosks, gardens, & groves of cypress." Its inner enclosure alone is devoted to the sole use of the Sultan and his harem; in the second court are the treasury, imperial kitchens & stables, divan, hall of justice, the arsenal, formerly the church of St Irene, and the Corinthian column of Theodosius; and in the outer court (the anc. Forum Augusti), are the mint, various state-offices, the infirmaries, &c. This court is entered from the city by a large and heavy gate termed the "Porte," a name which has thence been applied to the divan of the Turkish Sultan. Immediately without the seraglio, is the principal mosque of St Sophia, originally a christian cathedral, built by the Emperor Justinian, between 531 and 538, at a cost equivalent to at least 1,000,000*l.* sterling. This edifice is in the form of a Greek cross, 269 feet in length by 143 in breadth (in its interior), and surmounted by a flattened dome 180 feet above the ground, besides several minor cupolas, and 4 minarets added to it by the Turks. In its interior are numerous large columns, a floor of variegated marble, and some magnif. bronze gates, but most of the anc. Byzantine paintings and decorations have been hidden by Turkish inscriptions, and the general effect of the building is destroyed by the presence of a multitude of lamps, globes, and other insignificant ornaments depending from the dome. Near St Sophia, is the mosque of Achmet, a fine structure with a beautiful marble pavement, & 6 minarets, a number possessed by no other mosque in the Mohammedan world. This mosque stands on the At-meidan or "Horse course," the anc. Hippodrome, of historic celebrity, a space 300 yards in length by 150 in breadth, and on which are the granite Theban obelisk set up by Theodosius, the broken pyramid of Constantine Porphyrogenitus, shorn of its bronze plates, and the identical twisted brass column which originally supported the tripod in the temple of Delphi. Other principal mosques are those of Solyman the Magnificent, a masterpiece of Saracenic architecture, of Mohammed II., Bajazet II., Selim II., Mustapha III., and Othman and Eyub, with the Valide mosque, built by the mother of Mohammed IV., and containing pillars from the ruins of Troy. Most of these estab. have attached to them one or more colleges or charitable institutions; that of Mohammed II. is surrounded by 8 endowed acad., a diet house for the poor, hospital, caravanserais, and baths all surmounted by lead covered cupolas. There are government naval and military & medical colleges, as well as numerous inferior schools, but the system of education throughout the whole is on a low scale, and very inefficiently conducted. The bazaars are extensive and well supplied, but have no architectural beauty; the numerous cemeteries in and around the city are among its greatest ornaments. Many new barracks, schools, & hospitals have been established in different parts of the metropolis by the late and present Sultans. Principal antiquities are the "burnt column," originally erected by Constantine the Great, a part of the column of Arcadius, the pillar of Marclan, vestiges of the Boucoleon palace, built by Theodosius II., the aqueduct of Valens, various subterranean cisterns, the principal of which called by the Turks the "thousand and one columns," is a vault 240 feet in length by 200 feet in width, supported by 424 pillars. About the S.W. angle of the city is the citadel of the "seven towers" (Heptapyrgium), a fortress erected about A. D. 1000, and now used as a state prison. The city proper comprises separate quarters for the Jews, Armenians, and Greeks, that of the last, "the Fanar," extends along the shore of the port, or the "Golden Horn." This fine harbour, which has usurped the name of the promontory on which Byzantium was built, extends between the city and its suburbs Pera, Galata, &c., for about 4½ m. S.E. to N.W., breadth varying from 1 to 4 furlongs. It is deep enough to float ships of the largest size, can receive 1,200 sail of the line, and is always full of mercantile and other vessels, with a vast number of light boats, which here form the principal vehicles or transport. A bridge of boats across it, constructed in 1837, connects the Fanar with Pera; besides which suburb, those of Cassim Pasha, Tophani, Galata, and Tershanna with the imperial arsenals and dockyard are on its N. shore. [See the articles on those suburbs, also SCUTARI.] The foreign commerce of Constantinople, though extensive, is not so large as might have been expected. Imports consist of corn, iron, timber, tallow, & furs from the Black Sea and Russia, cotton stuffs and yarn, woollens, silks, metallic goods, watches, jewellery, furniture, dyes, and drugs from W. Europe, corn & coffee from Alexandria, sugar from the E. & W. Indies, wax, copper, gums, drugs, porcelain, overland from China, &c. About 2,000 tons of coffee, 1,200,000 lbs. of sugar, 300,000 lbs. of pepper and spices, 2,000 puncheons of rum, and large quantities of low priced cotton manufs. are said to be required annually for home consumption. In 1842, the imports from Great Britain were estimated to amount in value to 1,357,067*l.* (M. Gregor's Report). Exports consist of silk, carpets, hides, wool, goats' hair, potash, gall, yellow berries, linseed, madder, valonea, bones. In 1840, 5,630 ships entered, and 5,499 cleared out of the port; those entering comprised 567 British, aggregate burden 133,876 tons, the rest were principally Greek, Austrian, Russian, Italian, and Ionian. Scutari is the place of rendezvous for caravans from Persia, Armenia, &c., and is the seat of the principal corn warehouses, & manufs. of Turkish silk & cotton goods. Other manufs. are morocco leather, saddlery, shoes, meerschäum-pipe-bowls, mouth-pieces, pipe-tubes; and expressly for the manufacture of the last, large numbers of cherry trees are raised near the city. Constantinople is the see of Greek, Armenian, and Catholic-Armenian patriarchs. It was originally founded by Byzas, B. C. 656, & rebuilt by Constantine, A. D. 328, since which time it has been repeatedly besieged, but only twice taken; viz., in 1204 by the Crusaders, who retained it till 1261, and by the Turks under Mohammed II., May 29th 1453—an event which marked the final extinction of the Roman empire in the East.

COPENHAGEN (Dan. Kjöbenhavn, "Merchant's port") an important city of N. Europe, cap. of the Kingdom of Denmark, in the Sound, is built on the islands Seeland and Amager, which are separated by a narrow arm of the sea, forming an excellent harbour. Lat. of observatory 55° 40' 43" N., long. 12° 34' 44" E. Pop. (1847) 129,300 (in 1830, 111,793). Mean temp. of year, 46° .6; winter 31° .3; summer, 62° .7, Fahr. Copenhagen, the residence of the sovereign and seat of the court, is strongly fortified, and is one of the finest cities in Europe; it is divided into two parts, the smallest of which, called Christianshavn, is on the island Amager. Within the walls there are 15 open squares, one of which, the "Königs Neumarkt," is remarkable for its elegance and extent. On the north of the city, and connected with it by an esplanade, is the citadel of Frederickshavn, a regular polygon with 5 bastions. The city contains many noble public buildings, among which are the palace of Amalienburg, inhabited by the royal family, the castle of Charlottenburg, with a public library of 410,000 vols. and 16,000 (?) MSS. It is now used as an academy of the fine arts, and its parks are converted into a botanic garden. The castle of Rosenberg, built 1604, in which are deposited the regalia and many antiquities; the town-house built 1805-1815; the university partly rebuilt between 1831 and 1836, and the royal theatre. The chief ecclesiastical buildings are—the Frauen Kirche, the metropolitan church of the kingdom, adorned with the finest sculptures of Thorwaldsen; St Peter's, or the German church, with a spire 250 ft. in height; the Trinity church, on the round tower of which is placed the astronomical observatory; and the church of our Saviour, in Christianshavn, with a spire 288 ft. in elevation. Long at the head of civilization in N. Europe, Copenhagen possesses many scientific and literary establishments. Its university is rich and flourishing; and had, in 1845, 38 professors and 1,100 students. It has a polytechnic school, a royal academy of sciences & arts, an astronomical & a magnetic observatory, a large gallery of paintings, and a botanic garden. Its numerous academies publish important memoirs. Copenhagen is the centre of the commerce of the kingdom, and, by means of canals, large ships reach its warehouses in the centre of the city. Its commerce extends to all parts of the world. In 1847, 1,400 merchant vessels—average burden 57,000 lasts—entered & left its ports. It communicates with Roeskilde and Corsoer by a railway opened 1847, and by steam packets, with the chief ports on the Baltic, and with Havre in France. It is also the station for the naval force of the kingdom, and has a cannon foundry, an arsenal, and extensive ship-building docks. In 1847, there were on the station 6 ships of the line, 8 frigates, and upwards of 100 smaller vessels. The manufactures are not important; the chief industrial estab. are woollen factories, steam spinning mills, distilleries, breweries, iron foundries, tanneries, sugar refineries, manufs. of sail-cloth, porcelain, tobacco and chocolate. Copenhagen was founded by Bishop Axel in 1168. Originally built of wood, it was burned in 1728 and 1795. It was taken by Nelson in the battle of the Baltic, 2d April 1801, and bombarded by the English in 1807. Being very little above the level of the sea, it is liable to be overflowed during storms, and it suffered much from this cause in 1824.

CORDOVA, or CORDOBA (French Cordoue, anc. Corduba), a city of Spain, cap. prov. of same name, and formerly cap. kgdm. in a salubrious plain on the Guadalquivir, 86 m. N.E. Sevilla. Lat. 37° 52' 15" N., lon. 4° 49' 36" W. Pop. (1845) 41,976. Its Moorish walls, built on Rom. foundations, enclose a large area, much of which is now occupied by gardens or by ruins, except one large square, bordered by lofty & handsome edifices; and the city is generally badly laid out, meanly built and dirty. It communicates with a suburb across the riv. by a noble stone bridge of 16 arches, built by the Moors in the 8th century, and commanded by a Saracenic castle, still kept in a state of defence. Its cathedral, formerly one of the most holy mosques of the Mohammedan world, and still one of the most remarkable edifices in Spain, presents in its interior a "labyrinth of columns" of all orders and materials, which were brought from various anc. temples all around the Mediterranean (see description in McColloch's Geog. Dict., i. 638). Other princ. buildings are 13 pa. churches, gorgeously adorned, about 40 convents, the bishop's palace, with fine gardens, the remains of a palace of the Moorish sovereigns, now converted into stables for a royal breeding stud, the city hall, 16 hospitals, foundling and other asylums, 3 colleges, and several schools. The famous Cordovan manufs. of leather (hence called Corduan) have declined into insignificance; but the silversmiths and filigree workers of this city maintain their repute; and manufs. of paper, barrels, hats, & silken fabrics are carried on. Cordova was taken by the Moors in 712, and for many centuries afterwards remained the splendid cap. of the "Caliphate of the West," & was occupied & pillaged by the French under Dupont, in June 1808. It is the birth-place of the two Senecas, the Roman poet Lucan, the Arab physicians, Avicenna and Averoës, and Gonzalves Fernandez. Cordova was for some time comprised in the country of the kings of Sevilla. It was taken by Ferdinand III., king of Castilla, in 1236, & became cap. of one of the 4 old provs. of Andalucia with the title of kgdm. The prov. of Cordova is bounded N. by Badajoz and Ciudad Real, E. by Jaen, S. & S.E. by Granada and Malaga, and S.W. by Sevilla. It retains its old boundaries unaltered by the decree of 1834.

COREA, a peninsular country of E. Asia, tributary to China, and also to Japan, between lat. 33° & 43° N., and lon. 124° & 130° E., separated N.W. from the Chinese prov. Leaotong, by a wooden palisade, and having N. Manchooria, E. the Sea of Japan, and W. the Yellow Sea. Area including isls., 80,000 sq. m. Pop. uncertain. Coast line elevated and fertile; the interior is little known. Products comprise wheat, millet, rice, cotton, hemp, tohacco, ginseng, the fruits of N. China, plenty of cattle and timber, furs, bullion, iron, rock-salt, & coal. Manufs. are similar to those of the Chinese, whose habits and religion mostly prevail amongst the pop., though the Koreans use an alphabetic & not symbolic mode of writing. Commerce chiefly with Japan, whence are imported pepper, aromatic woods, alum, horns, Japanese and Dutch manufactured goods. The trade with China is stated to be wholly contraband; and no Korean trader is suffered to settle in China, or Chinese in Corea. Government despotic; and the election of the sovereign, and many of his important public acts, must be approved by the Emperor of China. Corea is divided into 8 provs.; chief city, Han-ching. It became subject to China at the end of the 17th century, to which country it sends every 4 years, an embassy with tribute in ginseng root, skins, cotton, pepper, silk, horses, and silver ingots. The Archip. of Corea comprises numerous isls. and islets in the Yellow Sea, and on the coasts of the peninsula; the chief are Quelpaert and Amherst.—Corea Strait is between the peninsula of Corea and the isl. of Kiusiu.

CORELEV, a pa. of England, co. Salop, 44 m. N.N.E. Tenbury. Area 1,340 ac. Pop. 525.

CORELLA, a town of Spain, prov. Navarra, 49 m. S.S.W. Pamplona, in a fertile plain, on l. b. of the Alhama. Pop. 4,648. It has an hospital, and sevl. distilleries, oil mills, and liquorice factories.

CORENTYN, or CORANTYN, a river of S. Amer., rises in Mt. Acarai, lat. 1° N., 25 m. E. of the Essequibo, flows generally N., separating British & Dutch Guiana, and enters the Atlantic by an estuary in lat. 6° N., lon. 57° W., about 25 m. across at its mouth. It was ascended in 1836, by Sir R. Schomburgk, as high as lat. 4° 21' 30" N., lon. 57° 35' 30" W., where it forms a series of fine cataracts, and is 900 yds. across. It is navigable for boats from the sea to the influx of the Cabalaba (lat. 5° N.), a distance of 150 m.

CORFE, a pa. of England, co. Somerset, 3½ m. S. Taunton. Area 1,050 ac. Pop. 279.

CORFE-CASTLE, a decayed bor., town, & pa. of Engl., co. Dorset, Isle of Purbeck, 4½ m. S.S.E. Wareham, within the parl. bor. of which it is now comprised. Area of pa. 9,860 ac. Pop. 1,946, partly employed in stone quarries. The town, which appears to have derived its origin from its celebrated castle, is poorly built, and has little trade. The castle, founded during the Saxon era, is a well preserved ruin, on a steep rocky hill, and surrounded by a dry moat; it was dismantled by the Parliamentary army. Fairs, May 12, and Oct. 29. The bor. sent 2 mems. to H. of C. until disfranchised by the reform act. King Edward the martyr was murdered here at the instance of his step-mother, Elfrida, A. D. 978.

CORFE-MILLEN, a pa. of England, co. Dorset, 3 m. S.W. Wimborne-Minster. Area 2,890 ac. Pop. 768. It has two endowed schools, and a money charity of about 60*l.* per annum.

CORFU, Corcyra, one of the Ionian isls., and the seat of their government, next in size to Cephalonia, in the Mediterranean, opposite the coast of Albania, from which it is separated by a narrow channel, between lat. 38° 40' and 39° 40' N., and mostly between lon. 19° 10' and 20° E. Shape elongated & irregular. Extreme length 40 m., breadth 2 to 18 m. Area 227 sq. m. Pop. (1836) 74,913. Surface hilly and very picturesque; soil fertile; climate hot, very variable, and unhealthy on the coasts. Principal products, corn, sufficient for 4 months consumption annually, with a good deal of inferior wine and oil, more than half of the isl. being covered with olive-groves; with oranges, lemons, salt, honey, and wax. It is subdivided into 7 cant., each sending 1 mem. to the legislative assembly. Besides the city of Corfu, it contains only some villages.

CORFU, a fortified seaport city, cap. above isl., near the centre of its E. coast, 10 m. S.S.W. Butrinto (Epirus). Lat. of citadel 39° 37' 1" N., lon. 20° 6' 2" E. Pop. nearly 20,000. It is beautifully sit. on an eminence, has been greatly improved of late, and is defended by a detached citadel, by forts Neuf and Vido (the latter on a small isl., the anc. Ptycha), and various new fortifications. Principal edifices, the cathedral, numerous other richly decorated Greek & Rom. Catholic churches, the arsenal, military hospital, residence of the lord-high-commissioner in the citadel, lunatic and orphan asylums, a light-ho., and an aqueduct. On the esplanade is a fine statue of Count Schulenberg, who successfully defended the city for the Venetians against the Turks in 1716. Corfu is the seat of the parliament, and high judicial court of the Ionian isls., and of a university and college. It is well supplied with necessaries, has a safe and convenient harbour, and communicates by weekly packets with Otranto, and twice monthly by steamers with Trieste, Athens, Gibraltar, and England.

CORFU (CHANNEL OF), an arm of the Mediterranean, between the isl. Corfu and the mainland of Epirus, about 30 m. in length N. to S., & varying in breadth from 2 to 16 m. Corfu and Butrinto are the chief towns on its banks.

CORHAMPTON, a pa. of Engl., co. Hants, 4 m. N.E. Bishop's-Waltham. Area 2,410 ac. Pop. 181.

CORI, Corra, a town of Cent. Italy, Pontif. sta., deleg. Frosinone, 29 m. S.E. Rome. Pop. 3,000.

CORIA, Caurium, a town of Spain, prov. and 47 m. N.N.W. Caceres, on the Alagon. Pop. 1,770. It is enclosed by granite walls of Roman origin, and has a castle of the 15th century, remarkable for its solid construction, a Gothic cathedral with fine sculptures, several convents and hospitals, & a modern aqueduct. In 1812, it formed the winter quarters of the troops under Lord Hill.—II. a mkt. town, prov. and 6 m. S.S.W. Sevilla, on the Guadalquivir, noted for a manuf. of large jars for storing oil and almonds. Pop. 3,156.

CORIGLIANO, two towns of Naples.—I. prov. Calabria Cit., cap. dist., 6 m. W.N.W. Rossano, and 4 m. from the Gulf of Taranto. Pop. 8,260. It is gloomy and ill built, but well supplied with water by an aqueduct from the neighbouring mnt.; it has a fine castle, & manuf. of woollen cloth, caps, & soap, with a trade in wine & fruit, the prod. of the vicin. Near it is the site of Sybaris, the type of anc. luxury and indolence.—II. prov. Otranto, dist. & 14 m. S.S.E. Lacco. Pop. 2,160.

CORINALDO, a town of Cent. Italy, Pontif. sta., between the Misa and the Cesano, deleg. and 25 m. W. Ancona. Pop. 5,859.

CORINGA, a town of Naples, prov. Calab. Ut. II., 15 m. W.S.W. Catanzaro. Pop. 3,000.

CORINGA, Caranga, a considerable seaport town of British India, presid. Madras, dist. and 35 m. S.E. Rajahmundry, on one of the mouths of the Godavery, with the only harbour (except Blackwood's), having smooth water on the W. side of Bengal bay during the S.W. monsoon.

CORINTH, sev. tushps., U. States, the principal in Vermont, 32 m. S.E. Montpelier. Pop. 1,979.—Others are in New York and Maine.

CORINTH, Corinthus, a city of the kgd. of Greece, cap. dep. of same name, on the isthmus of Corinth, between the gulfs of Lepanto on the W., and Egina on the E., 48 m. W. Athens. Pop. 2,000. Its citadel, called Acro-Corinth, was nearly ruined during the wars of independence. From its port, in the bay of Corinth, it exports dried grapes, wheat, oil, honey, and wax. Chief remains of antiquity, 7 Doric columns, and traces of an amphitheatre and Roman baths. This was originally the cap. of Corinthia, taken and destroyed by Mummus, 146 B. C. It was the entrepôt of the commerce of Asia with Greece and W. Italy. Its inhabitants formed numerous colonies, and acquired great riches, so that the city became proverbial for its luxury; travellers from all parts came to admire its magnificent works of art. St Paul preached the gospel here during more than a year. It came into the possession of the Venetians, after the taking of Constantinople by the Crusaders, and remained in their hands till 1446, when it was taken by the Turks. The Venetians re-took it in 1687. It was again captured by the Turks in 1715, and retained by them till 1823.

CORINTH (GULF OF), or GULF OF LEPANTO, an arm of the Mediterranean, extending into the centre of indep. Greece, and separating the Morea on the S., from Hellas on the N. Length W. to E. 75 m.; average breadth 15 m. It receives numerous small rivs., and communicates N.ward with the Gulf of Patras, by the Strait of Lepanto. Shores highly picturesque, & in many parts very fertile; around them are the towns Lepanto, Galaxidi, Livadostro, Corinth, Vasiliko, and Vostizza.

CORINTH (ISTH. OF), a neck of land, in Greece, uniting the Morea with Attica, between the gulfs of Corinth and Egina. Length about 20 m.;

breadth varies from 4 to 8 m. Its scenery is very interesting, and on it are various remains of antiquity, including the Isthmian wall, and traces of the famous temple of Neptune. The vill. Kalamaki is on its N., & Kenkries on its S. coast.

CORIO, a mkt. town, Sard. states, cap. mand., prov. and 20 m. N.N.W. Turin. Pop. 5,813.

CORK, the most southerly and largest co. of Ireland, Munster, bounded on the N. by Limerick, N.E. by Tipperary, E. by Waterford, and on the other sides by the Atlantic Ocean. Greatest length 100 m., breadth 55 m. Area 2,885 sq. m., or 1,846,333 ac., of which about 1,308,000 are arable, 52,180 in plantations, and 465,889 waste. Inhabited houses 121,510. Pop. (excluding the city of Cork), 773,398. Surface mntnns. in the W.; in the N. and E. rich and fertile, but deficient in timber. Old red sandstone and mntn. limestone are the predominant rocks, with some seams of coal. Silurian strata in the S.E. dists. prevail. Coast deeply indented by some of the finest bays and harbours in the world; the principal being Bantry and Dunmanus bays, and Clonakilty, Kinsale, Cork, and Yonghal harb. Principal rivs., the Blackwater, Lee, and Bandon; the first chiefly, the others wholly, within this co. Small lakes are numerous, and in many parts the scenery is highly picturesque. Chief crops, oats, wheat, and potatoes; considerable quantities of which are exported from Cork. Properties generally very large, farms small. Average rent of land 18s. 7d. per ac. From 1,500 to 2,000 hands are employed at Allahies in raising copper; after which limestone is the principal mineral product. Principal manufs. linen weaving, with distilling in Cork. The co. is subdivided into E. and W. Ridings, 19 baronies, and 269 pas., mostly in the dioceses of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross. After Cork city, the cap., the principal towns are Yonghal, Bandon, and Kinsale. The co. sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. electors in 1848, 3,674. Cork is supposed by some to have been originally peopled by the Iberi from Spain. The ancient territory was more extensive than at present, and previous to 1172, formed a kingdom under the Macarthys.

CORK, a city, parl. bor., and river port of Ireland, cap. co. Cork, and a co. of itself, on the Lee, 11 m. above the entrance of Cork harbour, and 137 m. S.W. Dublin. Area of co. of city 48,006 ac.; of the municipality 2,683 ac. Pop. of co. of city, or barony, 106,055; of munic. bor. 80,720, 5-6ths of whom are Roman Catholics. The city—proper is built on an isl. formed by the Lee, which riv. is here crossed by 9 modern bridges, several of them elegant structures. Its main streets are broad, well paved, and lighted with gas; but a large part of the city consists of wretched lanes, inhabited by a pop. in the lowest destitution. Houses in the more ancient quarters are mostly of limestone; elsewhere they are of brick, frequently faced with slate, and nowhere do they present much regularity of architecture. Among the most striking edifices, are the city & co. court-ho., erected at a cost of 22,000*l.*, and having a portico, surmounted by a group of colossal figures; the mansion-ho., on a fine walk termed the Mardyke; the exchange, commercial buildings, old co. court-ho., co. and city prisons, ho. of correction, convict dépôt, savings bank, N. and S. infirmaries, lunatic asylum, custom-house, Cork royal institution, and the Episcopal palace of the united diocese of Cork, Cloyne, and Ross. The cathedral is a plain and uninteresting building. Here are three large Roman Catholic churches, one of which ranks as a Rom. Catholic cathedral, various other places of worship, Augustine, Franciscan, Dominican, and Capuchin monasteries (the two latter possessing very handsome chapels), and two nunneries, to which are attached large female schools. Charitable institutions comprise, besides the infirmaries, fever, lying-in, and founding hospitals, the Magdalen asylum and refuge for females, green and blue-coat schools, the Monk's schools, government pawn-bank (mont de piété) estab. in 1841, and numerous other charities of less note. Principal scientific institutions—Queen's College, the school of medicine and surgery, Cork library, philosophical library, fine art, Cuvierian, agricultural, horticultural, & other societies, and the mechanics' institution. Cork has several club-houses and banks, a chamber of commerce, 3 theatres, a circus, & 3 newspapers. Near it are cavalry and infantry barracks, adapted for 2,000 men, & a public cemetery. Its beautiful environs are studded with country residences belonging to merchants, &c. Principal manufs. are of leather, iron, and other metallic goods, glass, gloves, and paper, and there are some extensive breweries & distilleries; the woollen and cotton manufs., formerly extensive, are now all but extinct. The trade is extensive; in 1835, the exports, consisting of corn, flour, butter, & other Irish produce, amounted in reg. value to 2,909,846*l.*, and the imports to 2,751,684*l.*; the latter consisted chiefly of manufactured goods from England; wines, fruits, and salt from Portugal and the Mediterranean; timber from the Baltic and N. America. Reg. shipping (1847) 406 vessels, aggreg. burden 48,214 tons. Customs revenue (1846) 319,647*l.* 14s. Cork communicates by steam-packets with London, Dublin, Bristol, Liverpool, & Glasgow. Its corporation consists of a mayor, recorder, sheriff, 16 aldermen, and 48 town-councillors, elected from its 8 wards. Corp. rev. (1845) 10,194*l.* It is the seat of assizes for the city and the co. Cork, of quarter-sessions, and a recorder's weekly court; and the head-quarters of the S. military dist. of Ireland. It sends 2 mems. to the H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 3,574. Mkts. daily; those on Wed. and Sat. for grain; cattle-mkts. 3 times weekly; and 2 large annl. fairs are held in the vicinity. Cork is the birthplace of the artists Barry and Mac-lise, of O'Keefe, and of the dramatic author Sheridan Knowles.—Cork Harbour is a finelandlocked basin, formed by the estuary of the Lee, which is navigable to 1½ m. above Cork city. It is large and deep enough to contain the whole British navy, and has an entrance 1 m. across, within which its breadth varies to 8 m. It contains Spike & Haulbowline isls., on which are artillery barracks and various ordnance works. Lat. 51° 50' 4" N., lon. 8° 19' W. On its shores are the towns COVE & PASSAGE, (which see), with quays 4 m. in length, & which were erected at a cost of 100,000*l.* Harbour rev. (1845) 9,897*l.*

CORNWALL, a co. of Engl., forming its S.W. extremity, enclosed on all sides by the sea, except E.ward, where it is mostly separated from Devonshire by the riv. Tamar. Length, 78 m.; breadth, 43 m. Area 866,474, of which 650,000 are estimated to be arable, pasture, and meadow lands. Pop. 341,279. Surf. intersected from W. to E., by a ridge of rugged and bleak hills, and very scantily timbered, but it has some very picturesque and fertile valleys. William of Worcester states, that between Mount's Bay and the Scilly Islands, there had been woods and meadows, and arable lands, and 140 parish churches, which, before his time, were submerged by the ocean; and the sub-marine forests show, in this tract, a subsidence of at least 12 feet. On the N. coast, a considerable extent of surface has been overwhelmed with sand, covering hills of several hundred feet in height, which have a shifting progress. Shores greatly indented by inlets of the sea, the principal of which are St Ives and Padstow, harbours on the Irish Sea; & on the English channel, St Blazey bay, Falmouth harbour, and Mount's bay, between the promontories of the Lizard and Land's End. Principal rivs., the Tamar, Lynher, Towey, Fal, & Camel or Alan. The climate is very mild, especially the winters, but damp, with cloudy atmosphere, & frequent rain, yet on the whole very salubrious. Myrtles & some other plants of S. Europe, flourish in the open air, but fruits do not ripen well. Corn and potatoes are the chief crops, and agriculture has lately improved, though farms remain mostly small. Ann. value of land (1842-3) 774,692l.; do. of all real property, 1,353,261l. The pilchard fishery employs capital, varying from 200,000l. to 250,000l.; and, in 1832, 31,618 hds. of pilchards were exported. Cornwall is rich in metals, its tin mines have been known and wrought from remote antiquity. The great metallic district, extends from Dartmoor in Devonshire on the E., to the Land's End on the W. Tin is found most abundantly in the St Just, and St Ives, and St Austell dists. Copper in the dists. Gwennap, Redruth, Camborne, Breague, Marazion, and Gurnear. Silver, lead, zinc, iron, manganese, antimony, cobalt, bismuth, are also found in various localities. The capital invested in the Cornish mines is estimated at nearly 2½ millions sterling, and about 71,000 hands are employed. In 1838, 11,527 tons of copper, valued at 857,779l., were raised. The tin produced is estim. to average 4,000 tons annually. Nearly all the ores are sent into S. Wales to be smelted. About 5,000 tons of soapstone, and 7,000 do. of porcelain clay, are shipped annually from Cornwall for the potteries. The exports are nearly confined to mining produce and fish. Manufs. almost wholly domestic. Poor-rates (1844-5) 77,945l. Cornwall, including the Scilly islands, is sub-divided into 9 hundreds, and 203 pas., all in the diocese of Exeter, and S.W. circuit. Before the Reform Act, it contained 20 bors., many of them being mere vills, each sending 2 members to H. of C. It now, with its towns, returns 10 members, including 2 for each division of the county. Reg. elects. (1848), for the E. division, 6,197; for the W. do., 5,212. Principal towns, Bôdmin, Truro, Launceston, Falmouth, Penryn, and Penzance. This part of Britain was not subdued by the Saxons, till the time of Athelstan, and its vernacular language (Cornish, a dialect of the Celtic) has become extinct only during the present cent. The dist. contains many Druidical stones & other rude monuments, as also ruins of baronial castles. Co. rates (1847) 14,190l.; expenditure 12,163l.

CUAUTLAV-AMILPAS, a town of the Mexican confederation, dep. and 70 m. S.W. La Puebla.

CUBA, the largest of the W. India isles, situated between lat. 19° 50' and 23° 9' N., and lon. 74° 8' & 84° 58' W. It is of an elongated narrow shape, greatest length 764 m., breadth varying from 25 to 130 m. Area, including its dependant isls., about 32,800 sq. m. The census of 1775 gave a pop. of 170,370; that of 1817, 551,998, and that of 1841, 1,007,624, of whom 418,291 were whites, 152,838 free coloured, and 436,495 negro and coloured slaves. The coasts are surrounded with reefs and shallows, and only 1-3d of them accessible to vessels; on this part, however, there are several excellent harbours. There are numerous islets surrounding the coast, the principal of which are Los Pinos, Romano, Turignano, Cruz, Coco. The S.E. part of the isl. is intersected by a mountain range, the Montañas del Cobre, the highest parts attaining an elevation of 7000 ft.; this chain extends along the greater part of the length of the isl. The northern part is more level, with rich valleys and plains. Extensive lagoons and salt marshes lie along the flat shores. There are no large rivers. Some are navigable for a few miles inward for boats; others are used for irrigating the fields. The climate is more temperate than that of the other W. Indian isls., but also more variable. Snow never appears even in the highest parts; but hail-storms occur sometimes, and ice occasionally is formed at an elev. of a few hundred feet. Hurricanes are less frequent on land than in the other isls., though common in the neighbouring ocean, but earthquakes are frequent. W. winds prevail during the cold season, and rain falls every month of the year. Except in the low marshy grounds the climate is salubrious, and invalids from the U. States resort to the isl. Primary rocks and limestones prevail in the mountain districts; good bituminous coal has been found near Havana; copper mines were worked near Santiago in 17th cent., afterwards abandoned, but have again been re-opened and worked with some success, and a copper mine has been recently opened near Santa Clara by an American company. Gold & silver to any extent have never been found in the isl. Extensive districts, especially in the mountain regions, are covered with dense forests, among which the majestic ceiba and mahogany trees are conspicuous, with other valuable wood fit for shipbuilding, & palms, plantains, & beautiful ornamental trees abound. Only a small proportion of the land, about 2 millions of acres, is yet under cultivation, but it produces abundant crops of maize, yams, bananas, potatoes, sugar, coffee, tobacco, & to a small extent, cotton, cocoa, indigo. The uncultivated portions contain extensive and fertile prairies, where upwards of 1½ millions of cattle are reared. Only one indigenous quadruped has ever been found, the kuita, resembling a rat, and 18 inches in length. Amphibious reptiles, as the alligator, manatai, tortoise, abound, and serpents from 10 to 12 ft. in length. Birds of beautiful plumage are numerous, and fish of various kinds swarm along the coasts. Cuba is divided into 3 prov. (intendencias), the N. & central being the richest and most pop., and contains 22 cities and towns, & 204 vills. & hamlets. Chief towns, Havana, Santiago, Matanzas, Santa Clara, Santa Maria, Trinidad, &c. The commercial prosperity of Cuba has been of late years greatly on the increase. Provisions of all kinds, & manufactured goods, are the chief articles of importation, which, in 1842, amounted to 24,637,519 dollars, 1-8th of which was from England, and 1-4th from Amer. The exports amounted to 26,684,602 dollars, of which 1-3d were to England, and 1-5th to Amer. With all this trade it has not a single bank, and though it has only a specie currency, in no other country is there so much paper-money. The internal traffic is now facilitated by improved roads, and 800 m. of railroad opened in 1847. The government of the isl. is vested in a captain-general, who is supreme military commandant & civil governor of one of the provs. There is a governor of the other provs., who has independent civil power, responsible only to the Court of Spain. There is a military garrison of several battalions, and a marine force of 1 frigate, 2 steam-ships, & 16 small craft. Steam-boats ply between Havana and other parts of the coast. No foreigner can land on the isl. without procuring the security of a native of responsibility for his good behaviour. Cuba was discovered by Columbus in his first voyage, 1493. In 1511 the first settlement was made by the Spaniards, and soon after the aboriginal inhabitants were wholly extirpated. In 1762, Havana was captured and taken possession of by the British, but restored to the Spaniards next year. Cuba, from its position, and the nature of the trade-winds and gulf stream, might control the trade and intercourse of the whole Gulf of Mexico and the islands in the Caribbean Sea. [For education, &c., see HAVANA.]

Its private buildings are mostly mean externally, but internally often fitted up with great magnificence; a large and increasing trade attests the wealth of its inhabs. It is the seat of a tribunal of commerce, and had a few years ago 4,000 looms for silk and cotton stuffs, important manufs. of soap, saddlery, cabinet-work, jewellery, and sabres. Caravans come to it several times annually from Bagdad, Mecca, Aleppo, &c., and there is daily communication with Beyrout, Tripoli, and Acre. Large quantities of wheat, madder, hemp, and tobacco are raised in its vicinity, which is one of the "four paradises" of eastern poetry; the city imports British and other European goods to a considerable amount. Damascus is probably one of the earliest cities in the world which attained to consequence; it is mentioned in Genesis xiv. 15. It was taken by David (2 Sam. viii. 6); but soon afterwards recovered its independence. The city was taken by the Saracens, A. D. 632. In 1516 it fell into the hands of the Turks, and in 1832 was captured by Ibrahim Pacha.

DANUBE (German Donau, anc. Danubius and Ister), an important river, and next to the Volga, the largest in Europe, originates in the Berge, a mntn. torrent which rises in the E. declivity of the Schwarzwald in Baden, at an elevation of 2,850 feet above the level of the sea. This stream, when joined by the Brigach, and by the waters of a spring from the castle garden of Donaueschingen, takes the name of the Donau. It flows first generally E.N.E. through an alpine country to Ulm, thence E.N.E. and E.S.E. to Passau it traverses the plain of Bavaria. From Passau to Vienna E.S.E., it intersects a hilly region, and the remainder of its course, E.S.E. to Waitzen, S. to Bacz, and E. to the Black Sea, is through a country, generally flat, except at the defile of the "iron gate," E. of Orsova. Length (direct) 1,000 m., or including windings, 1,725 m. It drains the waters from a surface of nearly 250,000 sq. m.; its average fall is 18 inches per m., but below Pesth it is only 3 inches; at Ulm it is 1,400 feet, at Regensburg 1,000, at Passau 800, at Vienna 450, and at Pesth 300 feet above the level of the sea. Its breadth at Ulm is 108 feet, and in its lower course 6,000 feet; depth at Ulm, 6 ft., at Passau 16 feet, and lower down average 20 feet. It passes Sigmaringen and Ulm in Würtemberg, Dillingen, Hochstädt, Donauwörth, Ingolstadt, Regensburg, & Passau in Bavaria; Linz, Diernstein, Kornenburg, & Vienna, in Austria; Presburg, Komorn, Gran, Waitzen, Buda, Pesth, Peterwardein, and Carlowitz in Hungary; Belgrade, Semendria, and Orsova in Servia; Widin, Nicopoli, Rutschuk, Silistria, and Hirschova in Bulgaria; Giurgevo, and Brahilov in Wallachia. The chief affls. of the Danube are, on the right, the Iller, Lech, Isar, Inn, Ens, Raab, Drave, Save, Morava, Timok, Isker, Vid, & Jantra; & on the left, the Altmühl, Nab, Regen, March, Waag, Gran, Theiss, Temes, Chyl, Aluta, Jalomniza, Sereth, and Pruth. Near its mouth in the Black Sea it separates into several branches, the S. most of which, called the branch of St George, forms, by the treaty of Adrianople, the boundary between the Ottoman empire and Russia. It communicates by canals with the Elbe by means of the Moldau, & with the Rhine by the Altmühl. It is navigable for vessels of 100 tons from Ulm. Steam packets were established on the Danube in 1830. In 1840, there were 10 steam vessels employed between Presburg, Pesth, and Constantinople, and 2 between Regensburg and Linz.

DENMARK (KINGDOM OF), a state of N. Europe, cap. Copenhagen. It is composed of three distinct parts, I. the isls. in the Baltic and Atlantic, II. the peninsula of Jutland, and III. its dependencies, the duchies of Schleswig, Holstein, and Lauenburg. The principal portion is situated between lat. 53° 22' 42" and 57° 44' 52" N., and lon. 8° 5' and 12° 37' E. Area 21,651 sq. m. Pop. (1847) 1,378,200. It is bounded N. and W. by the North Sea, E. by the Cattegat and the Baltic, and S. by the Elbe. The coasts are greatly indented, and the country is perfectly flat; in the N., some parts of it are below the level of the sea, from the invasions of which it is defended by dykes. On the E., the surface rises into gentle elevations. The highest part of the peninsula is 500 feet, and of the isls. 400 feet above the sea. Holstein and Lauenburg are the best watered districts. Among the isls., only Seeland and Fühnen have rivers, the others being watered by mere brooks. Extensive marshes exist in all the valleys of the peninsula and the islands. Next to the Elbe, which forms the S. boundary of the kingdom for 80 m., the Eider is the largest and most important river. The largest lake is the Arve in Seeland. The principal gulfs are the Liim-fjord, Ringskiohing-fjord, Nissum-fjord, and the bays of Kalløe and Flensburg on the continent; the Ise-fjord in Seeland, and Odense-fjord, in Fühnen. Between the isls. and the peninsula of Denmark & Sweden, there are sev. passages called sounds, the chief of which are Ore Sund (the Sound), and the Great and Little Belts. The climate of Denmark is humid and cloudy, but, notwithstanding its northern position, it is, from the lowness of its level and the influence of the surrounding seas, much milder than the countries of Germany situated farther S. Mean temp. of the year 46° .6, Fahr.; shortest day 6½ hours; longest day 17½ hours. Storms are rare, and of short duration; average days of storm, 9, rain 137, snow 32. Prevailing winds, W. during spring and summer, and S.W. in autumn and winter. Soil almost entirely alluvial, covered with a vegetable mould well adapted for cultivation, in Jutland and the duchies, and producing excellent pasturage in the marshy dists. The proportion of cultivated to marsh land is as two to one. Agriculture has been greatly improved of late years, and corn is raised more than necessary for home consumption. The principal crops are barley, wheat, oats, buck-wheat, potatoes, hemp, lint, tobacco, and hops. Forests are not extensive, and mostly confined to the E. coasts of the peninsula and the isls. Seeland and Fühnen. Cattle are extensively reared in N. Jutland and the duchies. Horses of an excellent breed, and valuable for military purposes, are reared on a great scale, and exported to the average number of 11,000 per annum. Sheep are of a superior kind. Goats are kept in small numbers, pigs are plentiful, & game is abundant. Oysters, herrings, salmon, & seals are fished on the coasts and in the rivers. As Denmark has no mountains, except in Bornholm, where an inferior quality of coal is found, its mineral products are insignificant. From the absence of coal, metals, & water power, there are no manufs. of importance in Denmark. Woollen cloths, linens, bonnets, and paper are manufd. for home consumption. Government formerly protected several branches of manufs., but these are now confined to the porcelain works at Copenhagen, and the cloth factory at Usserød. Roads in general are bad, the best are in Seeland, Fühnen, & the duchies. A railw. was opened from Altona to Kiel (with branch to Glückstadt), 1844; Neumünster to Rendsburg, 1845; Hamburg to Berlin, 1846, and Copenhagen to Roeskilde, 1847. The geographical position of the country is favourable for water communication, & there are many extensive canals, the chief of which are the Schleswig-Holstein canal, which with the Eider river forms a communication between the Baltic and the German Ocean, navigable for vessels of 120 tons. In 1846, 4,019 vessels passed through this canal; and the Stecknitz canal in Lauenburg, which joins the Elbe to the Baltic by means of the riv. Trave, but it is navigable only for boats. The principal ports are Copenhagen, Altona, Kiel, Flensburg, and Aalborg. The commerce of Denmark has greatly increased since the peace in 1815; the chf. exports are agricultural products, horses, oxen, beer, and brandy. The greater part of these are shipped from Altona. The exports from Iceland, Greenland, the Farøe isls., & consisting of eider down, feathers, skins, dried fish, and wool are mostly shipped at Copenhagen. The number of merchant vessels belonging to the state was, in 1840, 3,905. Aggregate burden 70,380 lasts. The Danish government is (with the exception of the duchy of Lauenburg) an absolute monarchy, but since 1834 it is restricted by a national representation. The duchies of Schleswig and Holstein revolted from Denmark, 26th March 1848. As Duke of Holstein and Lauenburg, the king was a member of the German confederation, & had three votes in the full council of the diet; his contingent to the military force was 3,600 men. By the constitution of 1834, the kingdom is divided into four political provs., represented by four prov. states, the members of which are elected for 6 years. The pop. is divided into three classes, nobles, citizens, and peasants. The state religion is Lutheran, and the king is the head of the church; other sects are tolerated. The poor are provided for by assessment. Elementary education is widely diffused in Denmark, attendance at school is obligatory from the age of 7 to 14. The system of mutual instruction, introduced in 1820, was generally adopted in 1840. The university of Copenhagen, founded 1478, had, in 1842, 39 professors & 1,100 students, a museum of natural history and a library of about 100,000 vols.; and the university of Kiel, founded 1665, 31 professors, 250 students, museum, botanic garden, and a library nearly as extensive. The military force of the kingdom consisted, in 1842, of 24,823 men, and the navy had 6 ships of the line, 8 frigates, 4 corvettes, 4 brigs, 3 schooners, and 4 steamers. Public rev. (1847) 16,293,630 rix dollars. Expend. 15,928,932 rix dollars. The continental part of Denmark, formerly called the Cimbrian Chersonesus, was the country of the Cimbri who ravaged Europe 100 years. n.c. Its first kings were descendants of Odin, and hence issued many of the pirates, who under the name of Normans long ravaged W. Europe, and under whom the Danes made irruptions into England in 835 and 1042. After conversion to christianity, the Danes were long the leaders in the affairs of the north. The celebrated Margaret of Denmark, by the treaty of Calmar in 1397, united the 3 kingdoms of the north, and after the dissolution of the union, the Danes kept possession of Norway till 1814, when it was ceded to Sweden. The colonial possessions of Denmark consist of the islands of Farøe and Iceland, and part of the coast of Greenland, and the tropical possessions, viz., the Danish W. India islands, St Croix, St Thomas, and St John, with a number of smaller islands, the aggregate pop. of which amounted, in 1841, to 40,955, of whom 16,200 are free, and 24,755 are slaves. The establishments on the coast of Guinea, viz., forts Christiansborg, Fredensborg, Kongenstein, Prindsenstein, and the factory of Augustensborg. The town Tranquebar, with its dists., on the Coromandel coast, ceded to Denmark by the rajah of Tanjore in 1620, and the small dist. and town of Serampore (Danish Frederiksnagor) in Bengal, founded by the Danish E. I. Co. in 1755, was transferred to England in 1846. The Nicobar isls. in the Bay of Bengal, were taken possession of by the Danes in 1756; in 1840 the pop. of the Danish colony amounted to 6,000, but they were aband. on account of their insalubrity in 1848.

Streets clean and well paved, and lighted; the older, crooked and narrow; the newer, well built, and it has a spacious mkt.-pl., in which are a covered mkt. and a large assembly-room. Other principal edifices are a fine Grecian structure, containing the post office, Derbyshire bank, a hotel, and publ. rooms, a museum, All-hallows' church with fine tower and monuments, an elegant Roman Catholic church, many new chapels of ease, and dissenting chapels, almshouses built by the D. of Devonshire, the infirmary, co. and town halls, & an excellent jail. The free school, founded in the time of Henry II., is considered one of the most ancient in England. Amongst numerous public institutions are a philosophical society, town and co. library, mechanics' institute, and various charitable asylums. Annual revenue of charities about 2,000*l.* Adjacent to the town are public grounds possessing much beauty. Derby is favourably situated for manufactures & trade, standing at the S. extremity of a large coal-field, and communicating by canals & railways with a large part of England. It is a principal seat for manufs. of silk twist and hosiery; & in 1839, it had 17 silk mills, employing about 3,000 hands. Silk ribbons, cotton fabrics, hosiery, lace, porcelain of great beauty and elegance, fluor-spar and marble ornaments are also made in large quantities: and it has many rolling mills, foundries, and other metallic works, soap factories, tanneries, bleaching grounds, corn mills, and malting houses. Wages are stated to be generally higher and steadier than in most other large manufacturing towns, yet this town was the centre of the great strike of operatives in 1833-4. Mkt. Frid. DUBLIN (Irish Bally-ath-cliaith "the town on the ford of the hurdles," Dubh-tinn, "Black pool," the Eblana of Ptolemy), the cap. city of Ireland, and of co. Dublin, on the Liffey, close to its entrance into Dublin Bay, Irish Sea, 66 m. W.

Holyhead, and 135 m. W. Liverpool. Lat. of observatory, 53° 23' 2" N., lon. 6° 20' 5" W. Area of municipal bor., 4,943 ac.; of parl. bor., 2,807 ac. Number of houses, 22,000. Pop. of municipal bor., 232,726; of city & suburbs, 287,729. Mean temp. of year, 49°; winter, 39°.8; summer, 59°.6, Fahr. The city—proper is nearly surrounded by the Circular-road, 9 m. in length, and which (accompanied by a branch of the Grand canal on the S. and S.E.), encloses an area of 1,264 acres, intersected from W. to E. by the Liffey, its E. portion comprising 786 acs., and its N. 478 do. The river is here crossed by 7 stone and 2 iron bridges, and bordered on each side by noble granite quays, 2½ m. in length. Nearly in the centre of the S. half of the city is Dublin castle, an edifice of different ages, built on an elevated site, and containing an arsenal, an armoury, the viceregal chapel, and various government offices, with the state apartments of the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, who, however, resides generally at a mansion in Phoenix park. Adjoining the castle on the S. are its gardens; and on its N. side is the elegant exchange, a line of streets extending from which may be considered, with the Liffey, to separate Dublin into 4 quarters, differing greatly in their appearance and character. The S.W. quarter, occupying all the site of the anc. city, is mostly ill-built, irregular, and filthy; in this part are Christchurch and St Patrick's cathedrals, both containing interesting monuments, the archbishop's palace, the royal and foundling hospitals. The N.W. quarter, much more regularly built than the foregoing, is principally inhabited by the trading and middle classes. On its outskirts are many good edifices, and here are the new house of industry, Richmond penitentiary, blue-coat hospital, royal barracks, Smithfield and Ormond mkts., the linen hall, and the new courts of law erected on King's Inn quay, at a cost of 200,000*l*. The E. quarters of Dublin are by far the handsomest; & the finest approach to the city is on the N.E. The quarter in this direction comprises Sackville street, one of the finest thoroughfares in Europe, and in which are the post-office & the rotunda; and in its centre, the Nelson pillar, a Doric column, 134 feet in height, & surmounted by a statue; in this quarter are also the custom-house, and royal lying-in hospital, with Mountjoy and Rutland squares, and Marlboro' green. The S.E. quarter comprises St Stephen's green, in which is the equestrian statue of George II., Merrion & Fitzwilliam squares, College-green, now a paved area, on which are the Bank of Ireland (formerly the parliament house), Trinity college, and a bronze statue of William III.; Dame street, Sir P. Dun's hospital, the Dublin royal society house, and the mansion house, near which is an equestrian statue of George I. Princip. edifices not hitherto mentioned, comprise St George's church with a steeple 200 feet in height, 29 other Protestant parochial churches, and as many chapels of ease, 9 Roman Catholic parochial churches, 7 friaries, 3 monasteries, 8 convents, numerous dissenting chapels, and a synagogue; the commercial buildings, corn exchange, royal hospital at Kilmainham, various barracks, the new inns of court, the co. infirmary, Richmond surgical, Dublin, St Vincents, Steeven's, Mercer's, & sevl. other general hospitals, many maternity hospitals, the general dispensary, Richmond lunatic asylum, numerous other charitable institutions, the city assembly house, corporate halls, sessions house, Newgate, and several other prisons, and three theatres. Dublin is decorated with sevl. historical statues

besides those already named, & many of its public buildings are adorned with symbolical figures. Its university, chartered in 1591, is situated in Trinity coll., is attended by about 2,000 students, possesses a landed rev. of 15,000*l*. a-year, a library of 150,000 vols., a park, printing-house, anatomical & chemical departments, a botanic garden, & an observatory. Dublin has colleges of physicians and surgeons, an apothecaries hall, royal Irish & Hibernian academies, a royal institution, zoological, geological, phrenological, agricultural, horticultural, and other societies; various clubs, & mechanics institute. The zoological society has gardens in the Phoenix park, a fine open space at the W. extremity of the city, and in which is the Wellington testimonial, a heavy obelisk, raised at a cost of 20,000*l*. This park, the rotunda and zoological gardens, are the favourite places of resort for the inhabitants. The villages Kingsend, Irishtown, Sandymount, Ballsbridge, Donnybrook, Ranelagh, Rathmines, Herold's cross, Kilmainham, Glassnevin, Drumcondra, and Clontarf, are immediate suburbs of the city, the environs of which have much picturesque beauty. Dublin communicates with the W. of Irel. by the Grand & Royal canals, by railways with Drogheda, Kingstown, & Limerick, & by steam packets with Belfast, Glasgow, Liverpool, Holyhead, Bristol, Cork, Plymouth, Southampton, London & Havre. The Dublin and Drogheda railway is 31½ m. in length, & borders the coast of the Irish Sea N. to Ballbriggan, which, with Clontarf, Malahide, and Baldujan are on this line. The Dublin & Kingstown railway, 6 m. in length, has a S.E. direction from Dublin, & a continuation by an atmospheric line to Dalkey, 2 m. further S. Its harb., which comprises an area of 3,030 ac., has been latterly much improved, and near the mouth of the Liffey, are the Grand canal & the custom-ho. docks, the latter occupying 8 acres; depth at low water 12 feet, at high tides 24 feet; the wharfs and docks are accessible by vessels of 900 tons. Dublin had formerly important manufs. of woollen, silk, and cotton fabrics, but they have declined into insignificance, and at present its chief trade is in export of linens, poplins, porter, provisions, &c. Its timber trade has very recently increased so much, that in 1846, 14,253 loads of timber and deals were imported from N. Europe, and 19,661 do. from N. America. Customs revenue (1846) 1,062,437*l*.; excise do. 320,902*l*. Reg. shipping of port 417 vessels; aggregate burden 37,210 tons. Steamers 46 (10,865 tons), mostly employed in the coasting and cross-channel trade. Ships entered (1845) 308; aggregate burden 69,852 tons. Value of Irish produce exported 72,445*l*. Harbour revenue (1843) 33,383*l*.; revenue of port, including Kingstown and Howth harbours, 35,017*l*. The corp. consists of a Lord Mayor and 15 aldermen, and 45 town-councillors, elected out of the 15 municipal wards. Corp. revenue (1845) 34,602*l*. Besides the Lord Mayor's weekly courts, here are courts of conscience for debts under 40*s*. Irish, and 5 manor courts; and Dublin is the seat of a chamber of commerce, and the ouzel-galley society for the arbitration of commercial disputes. Net annual value of holdings in the city, was in 1843 estimated at 670,435*l*.; and united value of parochial livings at 7,285*l*., that of St Peter's pa. amounting to 1,087*l*. The see of the archbishop comprises the cos. Dublin and Wicklow, with part of Kildare, and his jurisdiction is nearly co-extensive with the provs. Leinster and Munster. Dublin is divided into 20 pas. and 15 municipal wards, with 15 aldermen, one of whom is chosen Lord Mayor, & 45 councllors; sends 2 members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 16,614.

DUMBARTON, or DUNBARTON, a royal parl. and munic. bor., seaport town, and pa. of Scotland, cap. co. Dumbarton, on the Leven, here crossed by a 5 arched bridge, near its confl. with the Clyde, 13 m. N.W. Glasgow. Area of pa. 8,155 ac. Pop. 3,828; do. of town 3,732; do. of parl. bor. 4,391. It has a good main street, but its houses are in general too crowded. A suburb called Renton, is situated on the W. side of river. Dumbarton castle, situated on a bold isolated basaltic rock, probably a Roman station, at the river's mouth, is a fortress of great antiquity and historical interest, and one of those maintained at the public expense by the terms of the union. The Leven is navigable from its mouth to the quay, at high water; and the town has flourishing glass works, some ship-building and rope making. Various manufs. are carried on in its vicinity. Its schools have long enjoyed deserved repute; the novelist, Smollet, was a native of Dumbarton. The bor. unites with Port-Glasgow, Renfrew, Rutherglen, and Kilmarnock, to return 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1848) 164. It was erected into a royal burgh by Alexander II. in 1222. On or near its site had previously stood the town of Alchuid, the cap. of the Strathclyde sovereignty.

DUMBARTONSHIRE (formerly Lennox), a co. of Scotland, chiefly enclosed by Lochs Lomond and Long, and the Firth of Clyde, which separates it from the cos. Stirling, Argyle, and Renfrew; but having also a detached portion E.ward, between the cos. Stirling & Lanark. Total area 165,760 ac.; about 20,000 ac., forming a part of Loch Lomond. Inhabited houses 7,985. Pop. 44,296. Principal riv. the Leven. Surface mostly mtnous., and soil poor; but in the lowlands fertile & well cultivated. Principal crops, oats and potatoes. Estates mostly large; farms small. Average rent of land (1810) 7s. 10d. per ac. Annual value of land (1843) 72,041l.; of all real property 140,752l. It contains iron and coal mines, freestone and limestone quarries, cotton mills, which in 1847 employed 778 hands, glass works, paper mills, & extensive print fields. It is subdivided into 12 pas.; principal towns Dumbarton and Helensburgh. The co. sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,224.

DUMFRIES, a parl. and municipal bor., riverport, and pa. of Scotland, cap. co., on the Nith, across which it communicates with its suburb Maxwellton, by two bridges (one of 7 arches, as old as the 13th century), 9 m. from the mouth of the river in Solway Frith, and 28½ m. W.N.W. Carlisle. Area of pa. about 15 sq. m. Pop. of do. 11,409; do. of town 10,069; do. of parl. bor. 13,088. It is handsomely though irregularly built, mostly of red freestone quarried in the vicinity, and it is regarded as the provincial cap. of S. Scotland. Around it, of late, many handsome villas have been erected. Princip. edifices 3 pa. churches, one with an extensive cemetery, a vast number of monuments, and which contains the remains and tomb of Burns; numerous dissenting chapels, a tower in the High Street, the work of Inigo Jones, and where the town council meets, the Crichton royal institution (a lunatic asylum), the infirmary, dispensary, court-house, jail and bridewell, theatre, and assembly rooms. Here are 4 endowed seminaries united under the name of the Dumfries academy, various other schools, sevl. associations with libraries, reading rooms, an observatory, and a mechanics' institution. In Queensberry sq. is a handsome Doric column erected in 1780 in honour of Charles, D. of Queensberry. Vessels of above 60 tons can approach the town quay, and between the town and the mouth of the river are three other quays for larger vessels. Principal manufs. are of hats, hosiery, leather, baskets, clogs, & shoes. Dumfries has a large weekly cattle market, & considerable annual fairs for the sale of cattle, which, to the value of about 350,000l. are annually exported hence to England. It is also the princip. pork market in Scotland. Other chief exports, wool, freestone, hosiery, shoes, sheep, grain, and wood, mostly to England. Principal imports, coal, slate, iron, tallow, hemp, bones, timber (from the Baltic & N. America), wine, & colonial produce. Steamers ply hence to Liverpool. Custom's revenue (1846) 11,074l. 14s. Reg. shipping (1847), 8,366 tons. Mkts. Wed. Corp. revenue (1843-4), 1,416l. The bor. unites with Kirkcudbright, Sanquhar, Lochmaben, & Annan in sending 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848), 513. Dumfries became a royal bor. in the 12th cent., about the end of which a monastery was founded here, in the chapel of which John Comyn, a competitor for the Scottish throne, was stabbed by Robert Bruce, in 1305. On the banks of the Clyde are the ruins of a nunnery. Dumfries gives the title of Earl to the Crichton-Stuart family. On the rt. b. of the Nith is the extensive suburb of Maxwelltown.

DUMFRIES-SHIRE, a frontier co. of Scotland, bounded E. & S. by Cumberland & Solway Frith, and having on other sides the cos. Roxburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Lanark, Ayr, & Kirkcudbright. Estim. area 1,007 sq. m., or 644,385 ac., about 1-4th of which is arable. Inhabited houses, 14,366. Pop. 72,830. The whole valley of the Nith is composed of a red sandstone (the new red?). The mountainous districts are of the lower silurian strata. Limestone is quarried at Closeburn and Kelhead. Coal is found at Sanquhar and Langholm; lead at Leadhills. Gold was also in former times found here. Mineral springs at Moffat. The climate in the S.W. valley is mild but moist. Mean ann. fall of rain 36 in. The co. is subdivided into Nithsdale, Annandale, and Eskdale, watered by the three principal rivers, the Nith, Annan, & Esk. There are nine lochs in vicinity of Lochmaben, and Loch Skene, near head of Moffat water, at an elev. of 1,300 feet. Lochar moss, covering 10 m. of the valley between Nith & Annan, is principally a morass. A considerable part of the county is mtnous., especially towards the N. & N.E. Amongst the highest mtns. are Black Larg 2,890 feet, Lowther 3,130 feet, Queensberry 2,140 feet, Hartfell 3,300 feet. The high grounds afford good pasturage; and cattle, sheep, and pig rearing forms an important branch of rural industry. Soil fertile in the lowlands, and agriculture has greatly improved within the present century. Estates mostly very large; farms average in the lower dists., from 100 to 500 ac.; in the hill dists., from 500 to 10,000 ac. Average rent of land (1810) 6s. 1d. per ac. Manufs. unimportant. Annual value of land, 266,547l.; do. of assessed property in 1843, 319,750l. The Glasgow, Dumfries, & Carlisle railway, is (1849) in progress. The co. is subdivided into 43 pas. Principal towns, Dumfries, the cap., Annan, Sanquhar, & Lochmaben, which are royal boroughs; Thornhill, Moffat, Lockerbie, Langham, & Ecclefechan. The co. sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 2,149. Dumfries originally comprised the stewartry of Kirkcudbright, and by the Romans was comprehended under the prov. Valentia.

It stands mostly on the declivity between the riv. & Dundee-law, which has an elev. of 525 feet, up the sides of which, as also to the E. and W., it has of late considerably extended. It is irregularly built: some of its principal streets in the old town meet in a spacious market place, termed the cross; others extend along the shore. Principal edifices, a town hall, the new public seminaries, exchange coffee-room, trades' hall, Watt institution, St Andrew's and some other churches, a great number of dissenting chapels, of which Roman Catholic & Glassite are conspicuous, excellent barracks, the jail and bridewell, infirmary, lunatic asylum, dispensary, and numerous other charitable institutions. The most prominent object in the town, is the old square tower of the cathedral church, founded by David, Earl of Huntingdon, which rises to the height of 156 feet. The churches connected with this ancient tower, have suffered many dilapidations, and were nearly destroyed by fire in 1841. The Luckenbooths, at W. end of High Street, now nearly demolished, was the birth-place of Anne of Buccleugh, Duchess of Monmouth, and the temporary residence of General Monk, and afterwards, in 1715, of the Pretender. Whitehall, an old building, now demolished, which stood near the Cross, was the scene of frequent conventions of estates and meetings of general assemblies of the Scottish Kirk. The town was formerly surrounded by fortified walls begun by the English and completed by the French in 1547, no vestige of these remain but the names of the gates. Dundee is the principal seat of the linen manuf. in Great Britain. Its fabrics consist of Osnaburghs, sheeting, duck and coarse linens generally; besides which, linen yarn, cotton-hagging, canvass, and cordage, are goods extensively manufactured. In 1839, there were in the town and immediate vicinity, 47 spinning mills, impelled by steam, & producing 12,960,000 spindles of yarn: in the same year, from 4,000 to 5,000 hands were employed in weaving, and the estimated value of the manufd. goods exported, amounted to 1,810,466*l*. Kid glove-making, tanning, refining sugar, iron working & machinery, and ship-building, the last including the construction of iron steamers, are also important. Dundee has a tide-harbour, and several large wet docks, recently constructed at a great expense. Total shipping of port (1847) 320 vessels; aggreg. burden 48,742 tons, many of which are employed in the whale fisheries and the Baltic & American trade. There are 3 local banks and a savings bank, and 4 weekly newspapers. This town communicates hourly by a steam ferry with Newport on the opposite shore of the Tay, and by railway with Edinburgh to the S., Arbroath, Montrose, &c., to the N.; with Perth, Cupar Angus, Forfar, Newtyle, &c., by the Scottish Midland railway; also by steam with Newburgh, Perth, Aberdeen, Leith, Hull, and London. Previous to 1834, the town formed only one pa. It was then by act of assembly, divided into 12 quoad sacra pas. The municipal borough is divided into 3 dists., town council consisting of a provost, 4 bailies and 10 councillors, including dean of guild. Corp. rev. (1843) 3,056*l*. Since the Reform Act, Dundee sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1848) 2,727. Markets, Tuesday and Friday. Among its celeb. natives are Hector Boethius, Halliburton, who was the first openly to profess the reformed religion in Scotl., Sir Geo. McKenzie, Lord Advocate, Fergusson the poet, & Admiral Lord Duncan. Sir Wm. Wallace was educated here.

DUNDONALD, a pa. of Scotland, co. Ayr, dist. Kyle, 4 m. S.S.W. Irvine. Area about 17 sq. m. Pop. 6,716. It is generally handsome, though irregularly built, on an eminence separated from a large suburb on the W., by a ravine crossed by a bridge. Principal edifice, its fine collegiate church, erected in 1821, contiguous to the ruins of the ancient edifice. The abbey, originally founded by Malcolm and his Queen between 1070 & 1086, was a monastery of Culdees. Here Edward of England resided for some months in 1304, and on leaving it set it on fire. It was rebuilt by Bruce, and here his body was interred. In 1589, the abbey, with its lands, was erected into a temporal lordship, and conferred upon Anne of Denmark, wife of James VI. The nave and tower, and some parts of the refectory still remain, and are partly Saxon and partly Norman architecture. In the town are various other places of worship, a guildhall with a spire 132 feet in height, town hall and jail, several public schools, a flourishing mechanics' institute, several learned associations, and subscription libraries. The linen manuf. here dates from the 17th century, and since 1778, the finest kinds of table linen, diapers, damasks, have been woven at Dnnfermline, the finer yarns being supplied from Yorkshire and Ireland, and the rest from mills in the vicinity, and from Dundee, &c. The weavers work in their own houses; and, in 1836, there were in Dunfermline and its vicinity 3,517 looms, employing upwards of 5,000 persons, and estimated to produce goods to the annual value of 351,700*l.* Here are also some breweries, rope, tan, and soapworks, tobacco factories, and a steam-flour mill. Coal, lime, & iron, are raised in large quantities in the pa.; many of the collieries and lime-works belong to the Earl of Elgin, who also owns a railroad, extending hence to Charleston, the port of Dunfermline on the Firth of Forth. The town, erected into a royal burgh in 1588, unites with Stirling, Inverkeithing, Culross, & Queensferry, in sending 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1848) 564. Adjoining the abbey was a palace, enlarged by James IV. in 1500, in which Charles I. was born in 1600, and where Charles II., in 1650, subscribed the league and covenant.

Total annual value of mines (1842-3) 392,112l. Manufactures very various, but except ship-building at Sunderland and S. Shields, none are carried on extensively; in 1847 worsted and flax mills occupied 863 hands. All the E. part of the co. is intersected by railways, and the Great N. of England line traverses it from S. to W. Durham, as a co-palatine, was formerly under the sovereignty of its bishop, most of whose jurisdiction has now merged in that of the crown. It is divided into the 4 wards of Chester, Easington, Darlington, & Stockton, & 60 pas. & 15 parochial chapelries in the diocese Durham. Principal towns, Durham, Sunderland, Darlington, Gateshead, S. Shields, and Stockton. It sends in all 10 mems. to H. of C., 4 of whom are returned by the co. Reg. electors (1848) of N. div. 6,119; of S. div. 5,681. It gives the title of earl to the Lambton family. At the time of the Roman invasion the principal part of the co. was included in the territory of the Brigantes. William the Norman, soon after the Norman conquest, subjugated and laid waste the whole district.

DURHAM, an anc. city, parl. and munic. bor., and famous episcopal see of Engl., cap. above co., nearly in its centre, on a branch of the Great N. of Engl. railw., 14½ m. S. Newcastle. Area of bor. 10,260 ac. Pop. 14,151; do. of city 9,577. It has a most imposing external appearance, its cathedral and castle, occupying the summit of a steep rocky eminence surrounded by hanging gardens and plantations, and nearly encircled by the Wear, here crossed by several bridges, and beyond which on either side are the quarters Framwellgate, Elvet, &c. Its central and E. parts in particular, contain many good residences. The cathedral, founded in 1093, and one of the noblest edifices in the kgdm., including the Western porch, is 507 ft. in length, by 200 ft. in greatest breadth, and has a central tower 214 ft.

in height; it is chiefly of massive Norman architecture, and has the tomb of St Cuthbert, the chapel of the venerable Bede, a fine W. front with a Galilee chapel and two richly ornamented towers, 143 ft. in height. The see, founded near the end of the 10th century, and comprising the cos. Durham and Northumberland, with some other tracts, was long the richest bishopric in England; in 1843 its gross income was 22,416l., but its arrangements have been materially remodelled by the ecclesiastical commissioners, and the bishop's annual income fixed at 8,000l. Adjoining the cloisters are the deanery, library, chapter-ho., prebendal college, exchequer. The castle, a little N. of the cathedral, was founded by William the conqueror, and contains apartments for the bishop, but is otherwise chiefly appropriated to the ecclesiastical university, incorporated in 1837, and which succeeded one existing from the time of Cromwell to the Restoration. Durham has 6 pa. churches, a Roman Catholic & various other chapels, a grammar school with exhibitions to Oxford & Cambridge, a well endowed blue-coat, and nums. other schools; an infirmary, alms-houses, and many other charitable institutions, public libraries & assembly rooms. In the old town, on the N., are the mkt. place, theatre, and principal shops; in Elvet the co. jail and court-house, erected at a cost of 140,000l. The trade and pop. of the city have recently received a rapid increase, owing mainly to the extension of the coal trade. Manufs. are not important; hats, woollen stuffs, brass, and iron goods are the principal articles made. The trade in mustard raised in the vicinity is important. Mkt., Sat. The bor. is divided into 3 wards, and governed by a mayor, 6 aldermen, and 18 councillors. Corp. rev. (1846-7) 660l. Durham is the seat of co. assizes, bor. sessions, and sheriff's courts, the palatine courts having been abolished. It is also a polling-pl. for the co., and head of a poor-law union. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 1,106. About 2 m. from the city is Neville's Cross, erected to commemorate the defeat of David II. of Scotland in 1346.

ECUADOR (Equator) REPUBLIC of, an indep. state of S. Amer., mostly between lat. 1° 40' N., and 5° 50' S., and lon. 69° and 81° 20' W., having N. New Granada, E. Brazil, S. Peru, and W. the Pacific Ocean. Length 830 m.; breadth 510 m. Area variously estimated from 212,000 to 325,000 sq. m. Estimated pop. from 550,000 to 600,000. Its W. part comprises the great chain of the Andes, which here attains nearly its highest elevation, in the summits of Chimborazo, Cotopaxi, Antisana, Cayambe. On the E. the country descends into the vast central plain of the continent, and is traversed by the upper course of the Amazon, and its tributaries, the Putomayo, Nafo, Pastaza, Macas, Huallaga & Ucayale. W. of the Andes the Guayaquil, Esmeralda and Mira rivers flow into the ocean. The temp. of Quito and the more elevated table-lands, varies only betw. 58° .2 & 61° .3 Fahr. during all the year. Mean anri. temp. 61°.

In the low valleys the temperature is much higher. Along the coast, from Gulf of Guayaquil to Cape San Lorenzo, rain rarely or never falls. The valleys of Dañli and Guayaquil have regular rainy and dry seasons, and in the valley of the Amazon it rains almost daily, with excessive heat. Principal products are cacao, cotton, coffee, sugar, maize, yams, tobacco, corn, and fruits, of both tropical and temperate regions: wheat is raised in the elevated plains. In the S. extremity of the Andes are extensive forests, and the Cinchona bark trees is common; the plains yield wax, gums, resins and sarsaparilla. Turtles abound in the Amazon, and fish, especially the manta, are plentiful on the shores of the Pacific. Gold is abundant in the sands of almost all the rivers, and the contributions of the Indians of the interior are mostly paid in gold dnst. Lead and quicksilver are also plentiful; but few, if any, mines are wrought. Sulphur is abundant near Chimborazo. Woollen cloths and cotton goods are manuf. Ecuador is divided into the deps. Quito, Guayaquil and Assuay: principal cities & towns, Quito, the capital, Riobamba, Ambato, Baëza, Harra, Otavalo, Puno, Maynas, Cuenca, Loxa, & Guayaquil, which last is the great emporium of the foreign trade. Ecuador, which once formed part of the empire of the Incas, was discovered by Pizarro in 1526, and was held under the Spanish crown till 1812, when a revolution occurred which ended in the establishment of a free republic. In 1821, New Grenada and Venezuela united, & formed one republic, under the name of Columbia; but this union was dissolved in 1831, when the countries again separated, and Ecuador disjoined itself from New Grenada. The republic is governed by a president, chosen for 8 years, a vice-president, council of state, senate, and house of representatives, with 1 member for every 40,000 inhabitants. The pop. consists of the descendants of Spaniards, and of aboriginal Indians and Meztizos. There are very few negroes. In the W. mountainous region the natives are Peruvians, & are agriculturists and mechanics. The Indians of the plains are chiefly hunters and fishers.

EDINBURGH, a city, parl. bor., and the metropolis of Scotland, is situated on the S. bank of the estuary of the Forth, in lat. 55° 57' 3" N., lon. 3° 11' W., 392 m. N. of London. Pop. in 1801 (including Leith) 82,660. In 1841, of city and suburbs, 138,182. Number of houses (including flats) 22,898. The city is most picturesquely situated upon two ridges of hills. Elev. of High Street, at Tron Church, 255 ft.; do. of Register House, 217 ft. The old town occupies the more elevated ridge which terminates on the W. by the bold rocky eminence of the Castle Hill (elev. 383 feet). Between the old and new town is a deep ravine, now converted into gardens, and crossed on the E. by a spacious bridge, and communicating about the centre by an earthen mound. The new town extends to the N. of the old, and forms an extensive parallelogram, with wide & straight streets intersecting each other at right angles, & relieved at certain places by squares, a Circus, and a spacious octagon. To the S. of the old town extends the rural suburbs of Newington and Morningside. The principal feature in the old town is the long spacious High Street, which, with the Canongate, extends along the elevated ridge from the Castle on the W. to Holyrood Palace on the E., with narrow wynds or closes on each side. The houses on this part, built on the old continental system, are very lofty, and each story divided into distinct dwelling apartments or flats. In this line of streets are the High Church of St Giles, built in the cathedral style, with a tower in the form of an imperial crown; the Tron Church; the Assembly Hall, with a spire 238½ ft. high; the Parliament House, containing the old parliament hall, with oaken roof, built 1632, and the various courts of justice, advocates' and writers' libraries, and Royal Exchange. At the E. extremity of Canongate, in the valley between Arthur Seat and Calton Hill, are situated the abbey and palace of Holyrood, founded in 1128 by David I. The ruins of the choir of the ancient abbey remain; and the tower of the N.W. corner of the palace, built 1528 by James V., and containing Queen Mary's apartments, have been preserved and incorporated with the more modern buildings erected after the restoration in 1671. The castle, built on a precipitous rock of basaltic greenstone, contains some ancient apartments, the crown and regalia of Scotland, an armoury and barracks for soldiers. The university, founded 1580, by charter of James VI., is a noble institution. The building, founded 1789, forms a large quadrangle, with a spacious court in the centre, and contains a library with 90,854 printed books and 310 MSS., museum and class-rooms for the professors, who amount in number to 31, and who deliver courses of lectures on literature and science, theology, law, medicine, agriculture, and music. Ann. average of students (since 1800) 1,636. There is also a Free Church College, and a Theological College of United Presbyterians. A college of physicians and of surgeons, with a handsome hall and anatomical museum, the royal society, Highland & agricultural society, society of arts, antiquarian soc., royal academy of painting; a botanic garden, originally founded in 1670, and reconstructed in its present position in 1824; the high school, an elegant building on the Calton Hill, a naval & military academy, new Edinburgh academy, several other schools for the instruction of youth, a mechanics' institute, school of design and philosophic institution, united service and new clubs. The most remarkable public buildings of the new town are the royal institution, adorned with a statue of her Majesty Queen Victoria, St George's and St Andrew's churches, Lord Melville's monument, 139 feet high, Sir Walter Scott's monument, the national monument on the Calton Hill, an astronomical observatory, general post-office and stamp-office, Waterloo Place. Edinburgh is divided into 17 pas., and 13 quoad sacra pas. Besides these there are 23 Free Church congregations, 15 United Presbyterian, 9 Episcopalian, 2 Roman Catholic chapels and nunnery, 3 Independent, several Baptists, a Methodist, Society of Friends, and other churches. The charitable institutions are—Trinity hospital, founded 1461 by Mary of Gueldres, consort of James II.; eight institutions for education and maintenance of children; the orphan hospital, George Heriot's hospital, founded 1624—a very wealthy institution; Watson's hospital, Gillespie's do., the merchant maiden, trades maiden, and orphan hospitals, Donaldson's hospital, Stewart's hospital, an asylum for the blind, deaf and dumb institution, a royal infirmary, receiving from 3,000 to 4,000 patients annly., & sevl. public dispensaries; night asylum for the houseless poor, & house of refuge. There are 3 poor's houses & 2 ragged schools connected with the city and suburbs. The principal banking establishments are—the Bank of Scotland, Royal Bank, British Linen Co., Commercial, National, Edinburgh and Glasgow, Union & Clydesdale, City of Glasgow, Western, and a savings' bank. Edinburgh has never been famous as a manufacturing city, it contains few general merchants, its trade being chiefly retail; but Leith, which may be considered its seaport, holds a conspicuous rank for its extensive shipping, &c. Coach-building, flint glass making, and strong ale brewing, are its chief manufs. It has long held a high standing as a printing and publishing centre, with engraving, book-binding, and those trades connected with literature. There are 10 newspapers published in the city, 1 of which is published three times a week and 6 twice a week; 6 quarterly reviews, literary, scientific, religious, and medical; 6 monthly magazines, and various other periodical works. Edinburgh is the central point where the great lines of railway meet, and a part of the new town is traversed by an extensive tunnel of the Northern Railway. The elevated situation of the city allows of a free ventilation; and the supply of water brought from the Pentlands, 8 m. S.W., is now abundant. Mean temperature of the year 47°.1, Fahr.; mean of summer heat, 57°.2; winter, 38°.4. Annual fall of rain 24 inches. In 1841 the annual registered mortality of the city was 3,507, making the deaths in the proportion of 1 to 36.45. The climate of Edinburgh is reckoned salubrious, and is comparatively dry & mild. The varied beauty of the scenery of the vicinity is unrivalled. From the Calton Hill and summit of Arthur Seat, is obtained an extensive view of the plains of Mid-Lothian, the Lammermoor and Pentland Hills, the blue waters of the Firth of Forth, the neighbouring shores of Fife, and the distant Ochil Hills; the situation of the city, amidst surrounding scenery, bearing in many respects a resemblance to that of Athens.

The city is governed by a Lord Provost, elected for 3 years, who is also high sheriff of the royalty, lord lieutenant of co. of the city, & admiral of Firth of Forth, & has precedence of all official persons within his jurisdiction, 4 bailies, a dean of guild, treasurer and council; the whole amounting to 33. There is a guildry and merchant company, and 14 incorporated trades. The city is divided into 5 wards. It sends 2 mems. to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1848) 6,462. Annual revenue of city about 25,000. The court of session, or supreme civil and criminal court for Scotland, is composed of 13 judges, 5 of whom sit as lord ordinaries, to decide causes in the first instance, and 4 sit in each of the two divisions of the inner house. The court of justiciary is composed of the Lord Justice-General, the Lord Justice-Clerk, and 5 lords commissioners. The faculty of advocates (barristers) consists of advocates who have the privilege of pleading causes before the court of session. The advocates' library contains 148,000 printed volumes, and 2,000 MSS. The society of writers to the signet, who have also a large library, practise as agents or attorneys before the court of session. The solicitors is another society who practise before the supreme courts, but with inferior privileges to the W.S. There are also the sheriff court, justice of peace court, &c. The Register House, an elegant building E. end of Princes Street, erected in 1774, with an equestrian statue of Wellington in front, contains the public records, and records of landed property, for Scotland, under the direction of the lord register and clerks of court of session. The police establishment and society of high constables, form an effective protection for the peace of the city. The prisons for the city and co. are situated S. of the Calton Hill, & are under excellent regulation.

Simeon of Durham, writing in the year 854, mentions the fortress or castle under the name of Edwinesburgh, or castle of Edwin, probably so called after Edwin, Prince of Northumberland. In 1128 the town received a charter from David I. In 1215, Alexander II., son of William the Lion, held a parliament here for the first time. After this it frequently became the residence of the Kings of Scotland, and latterly the permanent seat of the Scottish parliament, courts of justice, and executive government.

EDINBURGHSHIRE, or MID-LOTHIAN, is situated in the eastern part of the S. division of Scotland, bounded on the N. by the Firth of Forth, on the E. by Haddington and Berwick shires, S. by Peebles and Selkirk shires, and W. by Linlithgowshire. Extreme length W. to E. 38 m.; average breadth 15 m. Area 358 sq. m., or 229,120 ac. Pop. 225,454. By the census of 1841, there were in the co., and it may be presumed chiefly inhabiting the city, 9,012 English, and 7,100 Irish. The S.E. part of the co. is intersected by the Moorfoot hills, a branch of the Lamermoor, of greywacke or lower silurian formation. From the S.W., the Pentland range runs towards the N.E., composed of porphyry, while the greenstone hills of Corstorphine extend from the Firth of Forth S.ward, & are continued by the greenstone and basaltic elevations of the castle rock, Arthur's Seat, & Calton, in the vicinity of the capital. Carnethy, the most elevated of the Pentland range, is 1,802 feet above the sea. From the S. the co. gradually slopes towards the borders of the Firth, and on the E. and W. extends into level and fertile plains. The principal rivs., none of which are large, are the Water of Leith, flowing along the N.W. declivity of the Pentlands, till it joins the Firth at Leith. The Esk, deriving its origin by two branches N. and S., in the southern part of the same mountain range, uniting to the E. of Dalkeith, and joining the sea at Musselburgh. The Almond, flowing through the N.W. valley of the co., and the Tyne, taking its origin from the Moorfoot hills, and flowing E. into Haddingtonshire. The greater part of the co. belongs to the coal formation, and coal is extensively wrought. A bed about 15 m. in length and 8 m. in breadth, extends across the district from Carlops to Musselburgh, containing 33 seams, from 9 inches to 6 feet thick, partly horizontal and partly edge. Sandstone of a very superior quality abounds, and is extensively quarried at Craigeith, Granton, & Hailes. Limestone is found in many localities, especially at Gilmerton, Crichton, & Burdiehouse. Slight indications of lead and copper have been noticed, but no metal is wrought except iron, which exists as ironstone in the coal strata. The co. is chiefly agricultural, and farming is conducted on the best modern principles. In the vicinity of the metropolis, extensive nurseries and vegetable & fruit gardens are established. There are extensive paper mills on the Esk, and Water of Leith, and several distilleries, breweries, potteries, but no other manufs. of importance. The Edinburgh and Glasgow, N. British, and Caledonian, and Edinburgh and Northern railways, traverse the co. Edinburgh, the cap., is the only royal burgh. Dalkeith is a burgh of barony, and Musselburgh a burgh of regality. Principal vills., Portobello, Newhaven, Lasswade, Loanhead, Ratho, Penicuik, Roslin, &c. Leith is the principal seaport, and Granton is an excellent steam-boat harbour. The co. (exclusive of Edinburgh and suburbs) contains 29 pas. and 5 quoad sacra do. It sends 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. elects. (1848) 2,088. Polling places, Edinburgh, Dalkeith, and Mid-Calder. Mid-Lothian and the surrounding districts, at the period of the Roman conquest, was formed into the prov. of Valentia. The country was subsequently occupied by Saxon invaders from the N. of England, and by them chiefly retained till about the year 1020, when the Lothians were ceded to the Scottish monarch, Malcolm II.

EGYPT, Ægyptus, the Misraim of Scripture, & Massr of the Arabs, a country of N.E. Africa, situated between lat. 23° 50' and 31° 35' N., and lon. 25° and 34° E.; bounded N. by the Mediterranean, E. by the Isthmus of Suez & the Red Sea, S. by Nubia, and W. by Barbary and the Sahara. Length, N. to S., 520 m.; breadth, undefined. Area, uncertain. Pop. estimated at 2,895,500. Cap. Cairo. The territory of Egypt is composed of a long narrow valley, enclosed by a double range of hills, which extend from Assouan to Cairo, and traversed by the Nile. N. of Cairo, where the mtns. terminate, the Nile separates into numerous branches, of which the two principal flow, the one N.E., and the other N.W., to the Mediterr., enclosing a triangular space, having the sea for its base, and called the Delta from its resemblance to the Greek letter Δ. These mntn. chains, which defend the valley of the Nile from the sands of the surrounding desert, rise to a height of about 2,000 ft. in the vicinity of Thebes; in many places they are merely low hills stretching into the desert. On the E. of the Nile the range terminates abruptly in Jebel Mokketam, near Cairo, and runs E. towards the Isthmus of Suez. On the E. of the Nile the desert is mountainous, and traversed by ravines & valleys, the most remarkable of which form the caravan routes between Cairo & Suez, and between Kenneh and Cosseir. The desert of Libya contains many oases, which owe their fertility to the lowness of their situation, enabling them to retain moisture. In the N. of the Libyan desert are 2 contiguous valleys, inclosed by branches of the W. mtns., in one of which, called the "valley of the Natron lakes," are found small pools, which in winter exude a liquid of a violet-red colour, to the height of 6 or 8 ft. This, when evaporated by the heat of the sun, leaves the substance called natron, a mixture of marine salt and sulph. of soda. The principal lakes are Birket-el-Keroum or lake Mæris in Middle Egypt, and Mareotis, Bourlos, and Menzaleh, in Lower Egypt, which last are shallow lagoons, separated from the Mediterranean by numerous peninsulas of sand. The climate of Egypt is characterized by extreme dryness, which is evinced by the perfect preservation of the colours & the sculptured surfaces of the temples on the banks of the Nile. There are but two seasons, the temperate, which lasts from Oct. to March, & the hot season, from March to Sept. The heat, during the day, is excessive in summer, owing to the confined position of the country, & the lowness of its surface; but the nights are cool and agreeable. In winter the weather is mild & pleasant. At Cairo, lat. 30° 3' N., the mean temp. of the year is 72°.2; winter, 58°.4; summer 85°.1; and at Kenneh, lat. 26° 10' N., mean temp. of year 79°.9; winter 63°.6; summer 92°, Fahr. Upper & Middle Egypt are more healthy than the Delta. On the subsiding of the inundation, fevers, dysentery, and ophthalmia prevail over the whole country. N. & N.W. winds blow permanently during the progress of the sun towards the Tropic of Cancer; but, on his return to the Tropic of Capricorn, it varies betw. S.E. and W. During the spring equinox, the country is visited by the pestilential wind called the Simoom or Khamsin, a hot S.S.W. wind of 50 days' duration, when the diseases peculiar to the country assume their greatest virulence. The mirage occurs on the extensive plains after the surface has been heated by the sun, on which occasion the country appears like a vast lake studded with islands. Rain is unknown in Upper Egypt; in the Delta it falls frequently from Nov. to March.

Showers are slight and infrequent at Cairo, yet in 1824 rain fell continuously for 8 days, & caused the destruction of several houses. During the French scientific expedition, the number of rainy days was 15, and the latest observations give 18 in a year in Lower Egypt. Fogs are rare, but very dense when they do occur. Snow never falls except in the vicinity of the coast, and then in very small quantity. In 1833 snow fell at Alexandria, Rosetta, and Atfeh, to the amazement of the inhabs., to whom the phenomenon was totally unknown. With the exception of the oases, the fertility of Egypt is confined to the valley inundated by the Nile, in the Delta, & a space of from 5 to 25 m. on the banks of the river, in Middle and Upper Egypt. The soil is composed of successive deposits of earth brought down by the river, and enveloping the sands of the desert. The Nile regularly inundates its valley for several months in the year. This periodic inundation commences in June, and attains its maximum height in Sept. After having remained stationary for several days, the waters subside, and disappear at the end of Nov. The distribution of the water is favoured by the slightly convex form of the central valley of the Nile, and is assisted by lateral canals. On the left or W. side of the river, the chief of these is the canal of Joseph, which feeds the anc. lake Mæris, at the bottom of the fertile valley of Fayoum. As a potable water, that of the Nile is reckoned the best in the world. Egypt has no metals, & the only minerals are natron, saltpetre, salt, marble, & the celebrated red granite called "Syene marble," employed in the construction of the pyramids, & in many of the monuments of Italy; the principal quarries are situated in the mtns. of Upper Egypt. Emeralds are found in the mtns. on the shore of the Red Sea, but the mines are abandoned. The cultivation of the soil is divided into that of the low grounds, or those watered naturally, and the high grounds, which depend for their productiveness on artificial inundations; the greater part of Upper Egypt is thus watered, & many means have been employed to facilitate the process. In anc. times lake Mæris was formed for a reservoir; & a complete barrage of the Nile, now in progress, promises greatly to augment the fertility of the soil. The plants peculiar to Egypt comprise the lotus, the papyrus (from which the first substance used for writing upon was made), the ziziphus, and many aromatic plants. The date palm flourishes to the lat. of Thebes, & on its fruit many of the inhabs. of Upper Egypt depend for nourishment. Egypt has always been considered one of the most fertile countries in the world. The chief cultivated plants are cotton, lint, hemp, indigo, sugar, tobacco, opium; the principal grains are millet, maize, wheat, & rice. Durrah (Sorghum Vulgare) forms a chief article of nourishment. The cereals of Egypt have always been celeb.; and onions, melons, cucumbers, are extensively used. The vine, widely cultivated in anc. times—extirpated by the Mussulmans—has been again introduced, and its cultivation actively promoted by the late Mehemet Ali. The fruit trees comprise those of tropical countries; those of Europe do not flourish; numerous plantations of mulberries have been made by Mehemet Ali; there are no forests; and sycamores and palms are thinly distributed. Among wild animals are the hippopotamus, crocodile, ichnenumon, jerboa, and the fox; the domestic animals comprise the ox & buffalo, horse, ass, mule, camel, and dromedary. Among birds are the ibis, celebrated in antiquity, the vulture, pelican, plover, bittern, and the quail, which arrives in great flights from the interior of Africa. The rearing of fowls, pigeons, and bees, is an important branch of industry among the peasantry, who hatch eggs by means of artificial heat. Fish is abundant in the lakes of the Delta and in the Nile, the salmon of which is excellent. Reptiles are numerous; and sponges, coral, the polypos and madrepores, are found on the shores of the Red Sea. The manufactures of Egypt are almost entirely monopolized by the Government. In 1839 there were upwards of 20 cotton-spinning factories distributed through the different towns. There are large dyeing and printing works at Cairo; woollen cloths for military clothing are manufd. at Boulac, where there is an extensive iron-foundry. Carpets are made at Benisouef, red caps at Foulah, and fire-arms & military accoutrements at Cairo. [BOULAC.—CAIRO.] The principal manufs. of the natives are of woollen cloths (which, however, have lost their ancient renown), pottery-ware, and carpets. The trade with Europe is carried on thro' Alexandria. In 1842 the total value of exports was estimated at 1,813,825*l.*, & imports at 2,470,866*l.* The traffic with the interior of Africa is carried on by means of caravans, which bring, in exchange for European & Egyptian products, ivory, gold-dust, skins, wool, gum, ostrich feathers, and metals (the slave market of Cairo was abolished in 1846). The chief commercial relations with Arabia and India are carried on by Cosseir and Snez. Since the establishment of regular steam packets in the Mediterranean and the Indian Ocean, Egypt has become the route to India for all the correspondence of Europe, as well as for the greater portion of travellers. The principal means of communication at present are the Nile, which is traversed by steam packets, & the canals, many of which have been repaired by Mehemet Ali; but even the best of them are often innavigable during a great part of the year. The route from Cairo to Snez (180 m.) is traversed by horses and vans, and the mail is conveyed in 18 hours. The project of uniting the Mediterranean with the Red Sea, by reopening the anc. canal, has been recently revived, but it is surrounded with difficulties, and not likely to be carried into effect. The more practicable and safe plan of a railway communication between Cairo and Suez has been resolved on, and is likely soon to be realized. This may again render Egypt the principal entrepôt of commerce between the E. and the W. worlds. Egypt was one of the earliest civilized countries in the world. It is believed that a colony of Ethiopians first introduced a form of religion, & the art of cultivating the soil. The empire was greatly extended under Sesostris and Rameses; it was subjugated by Cambyzes, King of Persia, 525 B. C. At that time it was occupied by an industrious population, had numerous cities and monuments of astonishing grandeur—of which the pyramids still exist,—the obelisks, many of which were carried to Rome & Paris, and numerous temples and palaces. For 24 centuries it has been subjected to foreign domination, and has fallen successively into misery and ignorance. It was taken by Alexander in 332; after his death it formed a separate kingdom under the Ptolemies, till the year 30 B. C. Augustus then reduced it to a Roman province. The Mohammedan Arabians seized it in the 7th century. The Caliphs possessed it for 2 centuries. In 1250 it came into the power of the Mamelukes, who were subjected to the Turks at the commencement of the 16th century. The French conquered it in 1798; in 1802 they were driven from it by the English, and in 1811 Mehemet Ali rendered himself master of the country by the massacre of the Mamelukes. By a judicious government & great reforms, Egypt under Mehemet Ali has made rapid progress in civilization; he has added to his territory Nubia, Kordafan, and part of Abyssinia; he had also extended his dominion over Syria, Crete, and part of Arabia, but in 1840 he was deprived of all his Asiatic possessions. By the treaty of London, 15th July 1841, the government is hereditary among the descendants of Mehemet Ali. Egypt comprises the provinces of Saïd, or Upper Egypt; Vostani, or Middle Egypt; and Bahari, or Lower Egypt. These are divided into 7 intendancies, which are subdivided into departments and arronds. Besides the governors of these divisions, the Fellahs have preserved their hereditary sheiks. The highest tribunals are those of the cadis; inferior causes are judged without appeal by the magistrates. In the absence of an official census, the following estimate of the pop. is based on a recent official return of the number of houses, allowing 8 persons to each house in Cairo, and 4 for the rest of the country:—Egyptian Mussulmans, 2,600,000; do. Copts, 150,000; Osmanli Turks, 12,000; Bedwin Arabs, 70,000; Barbaras, 5,000; negroes, 20,000; Abyssinians, 5,000; Circassian and Georgian slaves, 5,000; Jews, 7,000; Syrians, 5,000; Armenians, 2,000; Greeks, 5,000; Europeans domiciled in Egypt, about 9,500. The chief cities are Cairo and Alexandria. The largest pyramids are near Gizeh, 7 m. S.W. Cairo, but others occur at intervals on and near the l. b. of the Nile, over a space of 70 m.; the greatest temples and sculptures are found on the site of Thebes, and at Edfou, Denderah, &c. The chief establishment of public instruction is the University of El-Agha at Cairo. Mehemet Ali has established schools of medicine, languages, and agriculture—military and naval schools. The most of the primary schools and the libraries are dependant on the mosques. The Egyptian army, also created by Mehemet Ali, is raised by conscription. In 1841 it comprised 58 regiments, with 148,032 regular troops, of whom 11,644 cavalry, besides irregular troops, national guards, and a battalion of labourers and workers in the arsenal—in all, 146,341 men. The fleet consists of 7 line-of-battle ships, 6 frigates, 4 corvettes, 7 brigs, 2 steam packets, 23 transports. Public rev. in 1833 amounted to 2,225,725*l.*, chiefly derived from the land and capitation taxes, & from the Pacha's monopoly on raw and manuf. goods. Expenditure same year 2,102,525*l.* Egypt has no public debt.

Trades schools and infant school; some ancient alms-houses, and other charities for the poor. The ruins of the cathedral, by far the most extensive and beautiful of any ancient Scottish remains, are on the N.E. of the High Street. The cathedral was founded in 1224 by bishop Andrew Moray, was burned 1390 by the Wolfe of Badenoch, and rebuilt by bishop Barr. It is in the form of a cross, 289 feet in length; breadth of transept 120 feet; height of two western towers, between which is the grand entrance, 83 feet. The great central tower and spire which fell in 1711 was 198 feet high. The chapter house is entire and highly ornamented. The architecture is a mixture of Saxon and middle Gothic. An ancient wall enclosed a space of ground called "the college," in which resided the dignitaries of the cathedral. Several of the old mansions still remain entire. There are remains of a monastery of Grey Friars, and a conical eminence called Lady hill, the ruins of an ancient castle or stronghold of the Earls of Moray, on which is now erected a pillar to the memory of the late Duke of Gordon. Elgin is supposed to have derived its name from Helgy a Norwegian general, and was created a royal burgh by William I. Along with Banff, Cullen, Inverury, Kintore, and Peterhead, it returns 1 mem. to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 238. Corp. revenue (1840) 538*l.* Here is held the sheriff and head burgh court of co. Market-days, Tuesday and Friday, and 9 annual fairs. In the vicinity is Grant Lodge, a seat of the Earl of Seafield. The Earl of Elgin derives his title from this town. The beautiful and secluded valley of Pluscardine, in S.W. of pa. contains the ruins of Pluscardine priory, founded in 1230 by Alexander II., it is a model of Melrose on a smaller scale, and less ornamented, but of beautiful proportions, and simple style of architecture. It belongs to the Aremberg family, but gave the title of duke to that of Bourbon-Condé, till the death of the last duke, shot by order of Napoleon in 1804.—II. a vill. of France. [MONTMORENCY.]

ENOIA, or EGINA, an isl. of Greece. [ÆGINA.]

ENGLAND, is the largest & most populous portion of Great Britain, comprising the S. part of the island, between lat. 50° and 55° 46' N., and lon. 1° 45' E., & 5° 45' W., having N. Scotland, E. the German Ocean, S.E. and S. the English Channel, separating it from Belgium and France, and W. the Atlantic Ocean, the Bristol Channel, Wales, and the Irish Sea. Length from Berwick to the Land's End 430 m; breadth E. to W. varies from 67 to 320 m. Area 32,247,680 ac.

The surface is elevated in the N. and W. where it borders on Wales; a region in the centre gently undulating; and along the eastern shores, extending into alluvial plains and low lying marsh ground. The principal summits are in the N., where Scafell rises to an elevation of 3,166 feet, Helvellyn to 3,055 ft. A mntn. range there, continuous with ranges in S. Scotland, mostly separates the cos. Northumberland, Durham, & York on the E., from Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire W.ward; and continuing S.ward through the cos. Derby and Warwick, unites itself to the high lands of the S. by the Coteswold hills (Gloucestershire); having separated the basins of the rivs. Tyne, Tees, Humber, Trent, and Thames, from those of the Severn, Mersey, and Eden. The mntn. system of S. England has its centre in Salisbury Plain and Marlborough Downs (Wiltshire), whence proceed two long chains, the S. and N. Downs, through the cos. Hants, Sussex, Surrey, and Kent; a third range N. of the Thames, and which in the cos. Oxford & Bucks receives the name of the Chiltern hills; some ranges further N.E.ward; and a prolongation to the S.W.: the last in the centre of Devonshire, expands into the region of Dartmoor, where Cawsand hill has an elev. of 1,782 ft. Principal rivers are the Severn, Medway, Dec, Mersey, on the W. coast; and the Thames, Trent, Humber, Tyne, on the E. Besides these there are on the N., Ouse, Derwent, Aire, Don, and Wharf, all tributaries to the Humber; the Wear & Coquet farther N., & the Nen, S. Ouse, Waveney, Stour, and Medway, all disemboguing on the E.; the Wye, Usk, Teme, and Upper and Lower Avon, affls. of the Severn, besides the Ribble, Parrott, Taw, and Torridge, entering the sea on the W.; and the Tamar, Dart, Exe, Frome, Stour, Hampshire—Avon, Anton, and Arun, on the S. coast. Lakes are mostly confined to Cumberland, Westmoreland, and Lancashire, where are Windermere, Ulleswater, Derwent, Bassenthwaite, and Conistone Waters, deservedly renowned for picturesque beauty. In the S., Whittlesea-Mere (Huntingdoushire), is the only collection of fresh water deserving notice. Area (exclusive of Wales), pop., and subdivisions, as follows:—

The coasts of Engl. are extremely irregular, & abound with inlets. On the W. are Morecambe bay, the estuaries of the Ribble, Mersey, Dee, and Severn, and Bideford bay; and on this side of the isl. are the important harb. of Liverpool, Preston, Whitehaven, Bristol, and Gloucester. On the S. coast are the harb. of Falmouth, Plymouth, Dartmouth, Torquay, Exmouth, Weymouth, Poole, Southampton, and Portsmouth. On the E. are the Wash, and the estuaries of the Thames, Orwell, Humber, and Tees, and the ports of Dover, Harwich, Ipswich, Yarmouth, Lynn, Boston, Hull, Scarborough, Whitby, Stockton, Hartlepool, Shields, Sunderland, Newcastle, and Berwick.

The geological structure of England, commencing on the W., consists of the Silurian system of rocks which form the country bordering on Wales, and extend into that principality. This system is composed of clay, slates, & greywacke, intersected in various places by porphyries and other greenstone rocks. To this succeeds the Devonian or old red sandstone, which prevails through the cos. of Hereford, Monmouth, Devon, and Cornwall. The midland part of Engl., commencing at Berwick in the N., has a basis of mountain limestone, which extends S. & W., with some interruptions, into Devonshire, and contains the principal lead mines. Above this lie the great coal formations, commencing in Northumberland, & extending through Durham, W. Yorkshire, Lancashire, Staffordshire, into S. Wales. Above the coal deposits lie the new red sandstone and magnesian limestone, in some localities abounding in salt and gypsum. East of the coal and sandstone districts in a waving line from Whitby to the S. coast of Dorset, extend the Lias and Oolite. These are succeeded eastward by green sand and chalk, and the Wealden beds of Sussex. Diluvial clays and tertiary formations constitute the Norfolk & Suffolk districts, & basins of the Thames & S. Hampshire. [BRITAIN, CORNWALL, WALES.] The following table exhibits the mean annual temp. of England:—

The prevailing winds for the summer, autumn, and part of winter, are S.W. and W. In spring and other portions of the year, dry and scorching E. and N.E. winds are common. Most rain falls in summer and autumn. The greatest annual amount of rain falls in Cumberland (amounting to 51 inches), and in the W. coast generally. The least annual amount on the E. coasts (from 20 to 25 inches). Mean ann. fall of rain about 31 inches. From the year 1838 to 1845 there were in the pop. of England 1 in 64 persons married, one birth in every 31, one death in every 46, and an average of five children to each marriage.

Estates and farms vary very much in size; but throughout the major part of the country, landed property is very much divided; & 200l. has been loosely estim. as the average value of estates. In 1843, the total annual value of property in England (exclusive of Wales) assessed to the property tax, amounted to 82,337,016l., of which that of the land was estimated at 37,795,904l.; and, in 1831, it was found that about 834,000 families were wholly or chiefly supported by the cultivation of the soil. Agriculture, in some of the E. counties, has attained great superiority, and, throughout England generally, it is better conducted than in most parts of Europe, though in many districts, particularly in the W., it is backward. Wheat is the principal crop, especially in the E. and S.E. cos.; barley is raised chiefly in the central cos., and oats in the N., though they are cultivated more or less in all parts of the country. Pease, beans, potatoes, & turnips, are the crops next in importance. Rye & buckwheat are only partially cultivated; rape, flax, hemp, and mangel-wurzel, are only cultivated in certain parts. Hops are nearly confined to Kent, Herefordshire, and the vicinity of Farnham in Surrey, and their average annual produce is estimated at 30 mill. lbs. Adjacent to the large towns, a good deal of the land is commonly laid out in kitchen gardens, and in Bedfordshire an extensive district is appropriated to raising vegetables for the London markets. In the S.W. cos., large quantities of apples are produced, and Devon and Hereford are famous for their cider. Perry is made chiefly in Worcestershire; and mead in many of the cos. contiguous to Wales. The grape does not flourish so as to produce wine; beer and ale being universally the popular beverages which supply its place.

A full half of the cultivable lands are estimated to be in meadows and pasturage; and hay forms an important crop, for which Middlesex and the adjacent cos. are especially famous. The stock of horses (in England and Wales) has been lately estimated at 1,500,000; 2-3ds of which are employed in farm labour. Among the rest, a considerable proportion are partially or wholly descended from the English race-horse, a noble breed, originally derived from crossings of the Arab, Persian, and Barbary breeds. Horned cattle are estimated at 4,000,000, 1-4th of which stock is annually slaughtered; of these the Lancashire, Holderness, Northumberland, Durham, Devon, Hereford, Sussex and Suffolk, are the chief breeds; in addition to which, many have of late been introduced from Guernsey, Alderney, &c. Butter is a highly important product in Essex, Cambridgeshire, and Dorset. Cheese in Cheshire, Gloucester, Wilts, Leicestershire and Devonshire. The number of sheep has been estimated at 26,000,000. The long-wooled comprise the Romney-marsh, Tees-water, Lincoln, & New Leicester breeds; and the short-wooled, the South Down, Dorset, Wilts, and Hereford. Total annual produce of wool in England, has been estimated at 470,000 packs, of 240 lbs. each (upwards of 1,000,000 cwt.). Hogs are very generally kept, and are especially numerous in the forest lands of Hants, Berks, Gloucester, and Hereford, the former of which cos. are as famous for their bacon, as Yorkshire and Westmoreland are for their hams. Geese are reared in large numbers in Lincoln fens, partly for the sake of their quills. Many other kinds of poultry are also common. England is generally well-wooded, and 62,620 ac. of royal forest lands are enclosed for the growth of timber. The New Forest in Hampshire, the forests of Sherwood (Notts), Dean (Gloucestershire), are among the largest of the forest-tracts; but the oak, so valuable a material for the construction of our navy, grows to the greatest perfection in the weald of Sussex, Surrey and Kent, a tract comprising all the country between the N. and S. Downs, and many parts of which have remained densely wooded ever since the Roman period. The fisheries, though they have never been chief sources of national wealth, are highly important in some localities. In the N. Sea, the herring fishery is that principally pursued, and about 100 smacks of from 40 to 50 tons burden, are annually employed from Yarmouth, which has an extensive trade in herrings. The towns of Sunderland, Whitby, Scarborough, and Harwich, are also a good deal interested in the same trade. On the coasts of Devon and Cornwall, a large proportion of the pop. are employed in the pilchard fisheries, which fish visit those shores in vast shoals during the summer. Cod, mackarel, soles, flounders, salmon, in some of the N. estuaries, and oysters, are the other fish of most importance taken in the British seas. At many of the ports, ships are fitted out for whale fisheries in the N. and S. oceans, and these employ many thousands of seafaring people. England is indebted for the high rank she holds, in a great degree, to her extraordinary mineral wealth. The abundant supply of coals obtained in Lancashire, W. Yorkshire, Northumberland, Durham, Staffordshire and Warwickshire, have rendered those cos. the seats of the largest and most flourishing manufs. in the world, and it is supposed that from 210,000 to 250,000 of the pop. are directly dependent for subsistence on the iron trade. [For stat. of coal and iron see BRITAIN]. Tin is produced only in Cornwall and Devon, and copper is almost confined to that region; the produce of the former is estimated at 4,500 tons, worth from 292,000*l.* to 360,000*l.*; and that of the latter at 13,000 tons, valued at 1,170,000*l.* to 1,300,000*l.* a year. Lead is raised in Somerset, Derbyshire, and Cumberland, the mines being supposed to employ 1,100 men. The total quantity obtained annually in England and Wales, is estimated at 50,000 tons, from which silver to the value of about 30,000*l.* is usually extracted. Plumbago is found in the greatest purity at Borrowdale in Cumberland, and some of inferior quality in Devonshire, where also manganese is raised. Zinc, nickel, arsenic, alum, salt from beds and springs in Cheshire and Worcestershire, potters' clay in Staffordshire and Cornwall, lime, freestone and granite, are among the most valuable minerals. Manufs. are in the greatest variety. By far the most important are those of cotton goods, the great seat of which is S. Lancashire, and it is estimated that cotton fabrics and yarn to the value of 35,000,000*l.* are annually produced in England, by the manufacture of which from 1,000,000 to 1,200,000 individuals derive their support. The woollen manufs. are chiefly seated in W. Yorkshire, especially at and around Leeds, Wakefield, Huddersfield, Halifax, Bradford, and Dewsbury; also in the cos. Lancaster, Cumberland, Gloucester, Wilts, Devon, and Somerset. In Leicestershire 12,000 stocking frames are supposed to be at work; and Norwich has still some trade in worsteds. The manuf. of linens is pursued principally in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Durham, and Dorset; and that of silks in the metropolis (Spitalfields) and at Manchester, Macclesfield & Coventry, in which last town ribbons are chiefly woven. Norwich is the principal seat of the crape manufacture. The foregoing manufs. are now mostly wrought with the aid of steam, & the following table exhibits, with other particulars, a comparative view of the number of hands employed in them in 1838 and 1847:—

Mills working (1838).	Steam power (horses).	Tot. (horse) power employed.	Persons employed (1838).	Persons employed (1847).

Next in importance to the manuf. of woven fabrics is that of hardwares. The more ponderous iron machinery is wrought in Shropshire, Staffordshire, in the vicinity of Birmingham, and in the great naval dockyards. Sheffield, London and Birmingham, are the principal seats of the manuf. of cutlery. Watch and clock works are made especially in Lancashire: and the total annual value of the hardwares produced, is estimated at 17,000,000*l.* Leather gloves are made at Worcester, Yeovil, and Woodstock; boots and shoes in large quantities in the cos. Northampton and Stafford; and the leather manuf. is estimated to employ in all nearly 234,000 hands, and to produce goods to the value of 13,000,000*l.* a year. Earthenwares manufactured in the potteries of N.W. Staffordshire, & china wares in Derbyshire and Worcestershire, are supposed to amount to 2,300,000*l.* annually; & glass wares chiefly made in the N. cos. to 2,000,000*l.* a year, their manufacture employing 50,000 hands. Paper to about 1,500,000*l.*; hats to double that amount; bricks & tiles, soap, gunpowder, chemical wares, straw-plait, & all goods required for ordinary use, are produced in Engl. Extensive sugar refineries, distilleries, and breweries, are established in all the larger commercial towns; and the London breweries are estimated to supply annually from 1,800,000 to 2,000,000 barrels of porter. Ship-building is a most extensive and important branch of industry: the largest ships of the line are built at the great dock-yards of Portsmouth, Plymouth, and Chatham; and others at the yards of Sheerness and Deptford. Mercantile vessels of large burden are chiefly built in or near London, Liverpool, Sunderland, Newcastle, Hull, Yarmouth, Bristol, Southampton, & Cowes. Internal communication is effected by numerous navigable canals, and in every direction by the best turnpike roads in any country in the world; but both these means of traffic have been in a great part superseded by a most extensive series of railways, which already extend like a net work over the greater part of the kingdom. London, though placed near one extremity of the island, is the great centre of the principal railways; from it branch out the Great Western to Bristol, with a prolongation to Exeter and Plymouth; the S. Western to Southampton and Gosport; the S. coast railway to Brighton and Portsmouth; the S.E. to Dover; the North Kent, the E. Counties to Norwich and Yarmouth, the Great Northern to York, and the N.W. to Birmingham. Manchester, Derby, Leeds, York, and Stockton, are centres of numerous railways. The gross customs duties received at all the ports of England in 1846, amounted to 18,198,730*l.*; and the shipping registered as owned at the same ports in 1847, consisted of 18,119 vessels, aggregate burden 2,397,587 tons.

England, in the early middle ages, composed a heptarchy of 7 kingdoms—viz. Kent, Sussex, Wessex, Essex, Northumbria, E. Anglia, including the S.E. cos., and Mercia including the Midland cos. These provinces, under the Saxon monarchy, have, with a few exceptions, long been obsolete; but ecclesiastically, the country is divided into the two provs. or archbishopricks of Canterbury & York. The former of these, comprising all the country S. of the Dee and Humber, is sub-divided into the sees of Canterbury, London, Winchester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Ely, Salisbury, Exeter, Bath and Wells, Chichester, Norwich, Worcester, Hereford, Rochester, Oxford, Peterboro', and Gloucester, together with the 4 Welsh bishoprics; and the province of York comprises the see of that city, with those of Durham, Carlisle, Chester, Ripon, and the Isle of Man. There are 10,718 parishes or parochial benefices, the incumbents of which enjoy an aggregate revenue of about 3,250,000*l.* annually. The ces. are territorial divisions, some of which were established during the heptarchy. In each are a lord lieutenant & one or more sheriffs appointed by the Crown, a variable number of magistrates commissioned by royal authority to act as justices of the peace, &

one or more coroners, elected by the commonalty. Besides parishes, the cos. are generally subdivided into hundreds and tythings, and pa. unions; in addition, Sussex is divided into rapes, Kent into lathes, Lincoln into parts, the extreme N. cos. into wards, and Yorkshire into wapentakes and ridings, all which are more extensive divisions than those previously named. Cities and boroughs are governed by their own corporations, which, since the Municipal Reform Act, have consisted of a mayor and a variable number of aldermen, and three times their number of councillors or burgesses, elected by the different boroughs. The cities of London, Bristol, Canterbury, Coventry, Exeter, Gloucester, Lichfield, Lincoln, Norwich, Worcester, and York, and the towns, Hull, Newcastle-on-Tyne, Nottingham, Poole, and Southampton, are cos. of themselves, and participate in the regulations applying to cos. in the election of representatives to Parliament. Schomburgk, in lat. 0° 41' N. Affls., the Ripunony or Rupunoony, Maserocny, and Cuyuni. Its course lies through forests of the most gigantic vegetation. It abounds with isls., and in its estuary are three or four of considerable size. About 60 m. from its mouth are the falls of Etably. It gives name to a co. of British Guiana.

ESSEX, a marit. co. of England, having N. cos. Cambridges and Suffolk, E. the N. Sea, S. the Thames, and W. Middlesex and Herts. Area 981,120 ac., of which nearly 900,000 ac. are arable & grass-land, and about 50,000 wood-land. Inhabited houses 67,618. Pop. 344,979. Surface towards the Thames and the sea flat, marshy, & much broken into peninsulas and islands; in the centre and N. beautifully diversified and richly wooded. Princip. rivs., the Thames, Lea, Stour, Roding, Crouch, Colas, Chelmer, & Blackwater. Soil mostly a fertile loam. Climate on the coast damp, and producing agues; in other parts clear and healthy, less rain falling, than, perhaps, in any other English co. The farming is ranked among the best in England. The quality of the Essex wheat is very superior. Besides the usual crops, teazels, saffron, carraway, and hops, are largely grown. Great numbers of calves are fattened for the London market; and the butter of Epping is of the finest quality. Stock of sheep estimated at from 500,000 to 600,000 head. Farms of all sizes, some of those rented being among the largest in the kingdom, while some farmed by their own proprietors are among the smallest. Average rent of land in 1810, 18s. 5½d. an acre. Leases not so common as formerly. The co. is almost wholly agricultural; in 1847, however, 2,227 persons were engaged in silk manufactures. Oyster fisheries are said to employ a capital of from 60,000l. to 80,000l. Value of land (1843) 1,289,645l.; total value of assessed property 1,935,610l. Co. rates (1847) 63,737l.; expenditure 60,332l. Essex contains 14 hundreds, 5 half-hundreds, and a royal liberty, comprising 406 pas., in the home circuit and dioceses of London and of Rochester. Chief towns, Chelmsford (the cap.), Colchester, Maldon, & Harwich. The co. is intersected by the E. cos. railw. It sends 10 mems. to H. of C.; of which 2 are for its N., & 2 for its S. divisions. Reg. electors (1846-7) for N. division 5,461; for S. division 5,426; total 10,887. It gives the title of Earl to the Couingsby family.—This was the name of a kingdom of the Anglo-Saxon Heptarchy, comprising the above co. Essex, and parts of the cos. Middlesex and Hertfordshire.

In its upper third, it traverses a mountainous country, and near Someisat breaks through the Taurus chain, forming a double cataract; but from this point it is navigable to the sea, and in its lower part flows through a rich & flat region, where it varies from 200 to 800 yards in width, having as high as Hillah a depth of 18 feet, and navigable for steamers drawing 4 feet water, from the sea to Bir, 100 m. E. the Gulf of Scanderoon, and the nearest point of its approach to the Mediterr. Besides the Tigris, it receives the Kara-su of Kaisariyeh, Khabur, and Kerah rivers; and on its banks are the Bassorah (on the Shat-ul-Arab), and the towns Arja, Semava, Lemlum, Hillah (the modern representative of Babylon), Anhar, Hit, Hadith, Kaskisia, Rakha, &c.; and in Armenia, Melagherd, and Erzeroum.

EURE, Ebura, a river of France, rises in dep. Orne, flows N.E. through the depts. Eure-et-Loire & Eure, past Chartres, Nogent-le-Roi, Ivry, Louviers, and joins the Seine on left, near Pont-de-l'Ardeche. Chief affluent the Iton on left. Length 112 m., for 50 of which it is navigable.

EURE, a dep. in the N.W. of France, cap. Evreux, forms part of the old prov. of Normandy, situated on the estuary of the Seine, between lat.  $48^{\circ} 37'$  and  $49^{\circ} 28' N.$  Area 2,414 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 423,247. Climate mild and humid; surface generally flat. Chief rivers, the Seine and its affluents, the Eure, Rille, Andelle, and the Iton, affluent of the Eure. Minerals comprise iron, building and mill stones; corn is raised for exportation; apples and pears are important crops; pasture is extensive, and forests cover one fifth part of the dep.; excellent horses, cattle, and sheep are reared. Mining and manuf. industry very active. Manufs. include woollens, cotton, paper, glass, iron, copper, and zinc wares. The dep. is divided into the arronds. Les Andelys, Bernay, Evreux, Louviers, and Pont-Andemer.

EURE-ET-LOIRE, a dep. in the N.W. of France, cap. Chartres, forms part of the old provs. Orleanais and Ile-de-France, between lat. 47° 57' and 48° 55' N. Area 2,361 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 292,337. Chief rivers, the Eure and Loire; there are many marshes in the W. Climate mild and temperate. Soil extremely fertile; a great amount of corn is raised, & it is considered the granary of Paris. Excellent cavalry horses are reared, and numerous cattle, sheep, and poultry. The dep. is poor in minerals, but has several iron works, and manufs. of coarse cloths, cottons, and paper. It is divided into the arrouds. Chartres, Châteaudun, Dreux, and Nogent-le-Rotrou.

EURIPUS CHANNEL, Greece. [EURCEA.]

EUROPE, Europa, the smallest, but most civilized, and in proportion to its extent, the best peopled of the five great divisions of the globe; forms a peninsular prolongation of Asia, from which it is separated on the E. by the river Kara, the Ural mountains and river, and the Caspian Sea; and on the S. by the mountain chain of Caucasus. On all other sides it is bounded by seas, bays, gulfs, and straits; these are, on the N. the Arctic Ocean, W. the Atlantic, and S. the Strait of Gibraltar, the Mediterranean, the Sea of Marmora, and the Black Sea. The continental portion of Europe is comprised between lat. 36° and 71° 12' N., and lon. 9° 30' W. and 60° 50' E. Its greatest length from Astrakhan to Brest is 2,400 m., and its extreme breadth from Cape Nord-Kyn to Cape Matapan 2,360 m. Area estimated at 3,77,499 sq. m., 3-4ths of which is occupied by plains, and 1-4th by mountains and high lands. The peninsulas comprise 1-4th, and the islands 1-21st of the whole extent.

and estuaries by which it is intersected, and the immense extent of coast line (17,000 m.), which in consequence it enjoys. The principal peninsulas thus formed are in the N.; Scandinavia, between the Baltic Sea and the Atlantic Ocean; Jutland, between the Baltic and the German Ocean; the peninsula of Brittany, between the English channel and the Bay of Biscay. In the S., the Iberian peninsula (Spain and Portugal), between the Mediterranean and the Atlantic Ocean; the Italian peninsula, between the Adriatic and the Tyrrhenian Sea; the Hellenic peninsula (Greece and Turkey), E. of Italy; and the Crimea in the N. of the Black Sea. The principal islands are in the German Ocean, the British Isles, the largest in Europe. In the Arctic Ocean, Iceland and Novaia Zemlia. In the Mediterranean and its branches, Sicily, Sardinia, Corsica, Malta, Elba, and the Balearic islands. The isls. of Greece, Crete or Candia, the Ionian isls., and the islands of Dalmatia. The Baltic includes numerous islands, the chief of which are Seeland, Fühnen, and Laaland, Rugen, Bornholm, Oeland, Gotthland, and the archipelago of Stockholm. Most of the rivers of Europe belong to two great basins, that of the Atlantic and its branches on the W., and the Mediterranean on the S.; the line of separation, which follows the direction S.W. to N.E., is elevated on the W., where it is formed by the Sierra Nevada, part of the Pyrenees, the Cevennes & the Vosges mountains; it meets the Alps near the sources of the Rhine & Rhone. After cutting the Carpathians on the N. of Hungary, the watershed traverses Russia, where its elevation is very inconsiderable. On the E. and S.E., the Volga and its affluents contribute their waters to the Caspian Sea, and on the N.E. the Dwina flows to the Arctic O. The mean height of Europe is 636 feet. A great part of N. Germany, Denmark, Holland, and part of Belgium are plains, little elevated above the level of the sea; the great plains of Russia and Poland have a mean height of 360 feet; the other countries of Europe are traversed by chains of mountains, the chief of which are the Scandinavian Alps in Sweden and Norway, the Carpathians and their contreforts, the Sudetic mtns. in Germany; the Balkan mountains, the Dinaric Alps, and the chain of Pindus in Turkey; the Alps between Italy, France, Switzerland, and Germany; the Apennines in Italy, the Jura between France and Switzerland, the Cevennes & the mountains of Auvergne in France, the Pyrenees between France and Spain, the Iberian & the Cantabrian mountains, the Sierra Estrella, the mountains of Toledo, the Sierra Morena, and the Sierra Nevada in Spain. The principal summits of the different chains are, in the Alps, Mont Blanc, the culminating point of Europe, 15,810 feet, Monte Rosa 16,208 feet. In the Pyrenees, Pic Nethou or Maladetta 11,168 feet; in the Sierra Nevada, the peak of Mulhacen 11,660 feet. The mountains of Great Britain cover the N. and W. parts of the island; their general direction corresponds with that of the Scandinavian mountains, and like them also the W. sides are abrupt, and broken up by numerous gulfs, while they slope gradually to the E. shores. The principal chains are the Grampians and the Cheviots, and the culminating point is Ben Nevis 4,368 feet. Iceland is covered with mountains, the highest of which is the Öräffjokel, 6,405 feet in elev. The isls. of Sardinia and Corsica are traversed by a small chain of mountains, interrupted by the Strait of Bonifacio, culminating point Monto Rotondo in Corsica 8,760 feet. Sicily is traversed by a chain of mountains, separated from the Apennines by the Strait of Messina, culminating point Mount Etna 10,874 feet. Some of these mountain chains contain numerous extinct volcanoes, and the volcanoes of Etna, Vesuvius, Heckla, and Stromboli are still in a state of activity.

One of the great characteristics of this quarter of the globe, is the vast number of inland seas

Europe is every where well watered ; it has no deserts like those in Asia and Africa. The most important rivers are the Volga, Don, Dnieper, Danube, Po, Rhone, Ehro, Tagus, Garonne, Loire, Seine, Meuse, Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Vistula, Dwina. Lakes abound in Sweden, the N.W. of Russia, Switzerland, Hungary, and Italy. The most remarkable are Wener, Wetter, Mælar in Sweden ; Ladoga and Onega in Russia ; Leman, Lucerne, and Zurich in Switzerland ; Constance between Switzerland and Germany ; Neusiedl and Balaton in Hungary ; Maggiore, Como, and Garda in N. Italy.

The climate of continental Europe presents the most striking contrasts, but it is in general temperate, and exempt from the extremes of heat and cold to which the other great divisions of the globe are exposed. This is partly owing to the seas by which it is surrounded, and partly to the gulf stream, the heated atmosphere from which, is carried by the prevailing S.W. winds to the W. shores of Europe. The numerous inland seas, lakes, and rivers which intersect it, soften the atmosphere, & induce a humidity favourable to vegetation. South of the parallel of lat. 45° N. ; extreme cold is rare, and of short duration, while the heat is tempered by the mountains which cover this portion of Europe ; but the southern coasts frequently suffer from the hot wind of Africa, the Sirocco, which is occasionally arrested only at the foot of the Alps. The great plain of the N.E. being exposed to N. winds from the Arctic Ocean, has a much more severe climate than the other countries of Europe. The lower limit of perpetual snow in Europe, has, in the Alps and Pyrenees, an elevation of 8,000 feet ; and, in the interior of Norway, 4,000 feet. The soil of the different countries of Europe, is, on the whole fertile, and produces all the vegetable substances of temperate climates. In the peninsulas of the S., where the vegetation resembles that of the tropics, the sugar cane, the cotton plant, the orange, citron, fig, pomegranate, vine, rice, and tobacco are cultivated, and the trees comprise the chesnut, oak, and pine. In the central regions, comprising France, Switzerland, and the valleys of the Rhine, Elbe, Danube, and Theiss, and on the shores of the Black and Caspian Seas, the vine is cultivated with success ; the orchards supply the walnut, peach, apricot, apple, and pear ; wheat, rye, and in some places tobacco and maize are cultivated ; the poplar is common, the chesnut is rare, and the forests comprise the oak, beech, and fir. In the British islands, and the greater part of lower Europe valuable grain is cultivated, and the forests produce the oak, beech, birch, and pine. In the N. of Europe, barley and oats are cultivated as far as lat. 60° N. in Lapland, and the forests produce the pine and the birch ; the N. of Russia is incapable of producing any kind of grain.

The fauna of Europe is less varied than that of the other continents of the old world, but is rich in useful animals, and exempt from the noxious species common to Asia and Africa. The horse, cow, ass, sheep, goat, pig, and dog are distributed nearly all over the continent ; the buffalo, inhabits the marshy plains of Italy, Wallachia, and Hungary ; and the camel is found near the Black Sea. In the N. of Europe, the rein-deer renders valuable service to man ; many quadrupeds yield furs, and the eider duck furnishes the down so valuable in commerce. The forests are peopled with hares, foxes, deer, and wild boars, the wolf and the bear are common in Scandinavia. In the higher Alps and the Pyrenees are found the chamois, the wild goat, the bear, and the eagle. The birds of prey comprise the vulture, kite, eagle, and falcon.

The mineral riches of Europe are highly important, less on account of the precious metals, than the abundance of the commonest minerals, to which she greatly owes the development of her industry, & the superiority she has acquired over the other regions of the globe. The most productive gold mines in Europe are those of the Carpathians in the N. of Hungary, Transylvania, and Russia. The richest silver mines are those of the Erzgebirge, the Carpathians, and the Harz in Germany, and the Alps in Scandinavia. Iron is very widely distributed, it is most abundant in Britain, and general in the Cevennes, the Vosges, the Jura, the E. Alps, the Riesengebirge, and other mountains in Germany and in the Scandinavian Alps. Lead is abundant in the E. part of the Sierra Nevada, in Cornwall, and in the E. Alps. Copper in Cornwall, the E. Alps, and the Alps of Scandinavia. Tin is nowhere plenty, except in Cornwall, and zinc is mostly found in the Riesengebirge. The principal mines of mercury are those of Almaden in the Sierra Morena, and of Idria in the E. Alps. Salt mines occur principally in the Carpathians and in the E. Alps, but sea salt is obtained abundantly on the greater part of the coasts—especially on those of the Black Sea. Coal is most abundant in Great Britain, but rich mines exist also in Belgium, in the Cevennes, and in the mountains between the Rhine and the Weser. The greatest amount of turf is obtained in the low plains of N. Holland, and at the mouths of the Meuse and Rhine in S. Holland. Europe, now mistress of the world, was to a great extent plunged in barbarism, at a time when Asia and Africa had powerful nations, and rich and populous cities. The navigators of Phœnicia, Greece, and Tuscany diffused civilization and the arts through the countries of the S., while those of the middle and N. of Europe, separated by impenetrable forests and vast marshes, were inhabited by nomade races, unacquainted with agriculture and commerce. Among these, however, the Celts, Germans, and Sarmatians formed powerful nations, who held disputed sway, till the Romans subdued all the countries of the S. and W., and during five centuries gave them their language, their arts, and their laws. In the 5th century the Roman Empire was dismembered by irruptions of barbarians, & Europe again partially reverted to a state of barbarism. Modern civilization dawned amidst the struggles consequent on the founding of the empire of Charlemagne, at the end of the 8th century. It was much facilitated by the crusades in the 12th century, and far more by the invention of printing in the 15th century. The marit. discoveries of the 15th century, distributed over the globe the commerce and the colonies of Europeans, who now people the greater part of America, & have settled in Africa & the islands of the E. Ocean. The pop. belong entirely to the Indo-Europ. family of the Caucasian race (except a few mongolian tribes in the N. & E. of the continent). The varieties of this family consist of the Teutonic or German, distributed over the N. & W. of Europe ;

the Slavonian in the centre & E.; the Hellenic & Pelasgian in the S.; the Celtic in the W., &c. (See Johnston's Physical Atlas). Christianity in its different forms, is professed by a great majority of the inhabitants. The Greek church prevails in Russia, Greece, the Ionian islands, Servia, Moldavia, and Wallachia, parts of Turkey, Hungary, Transylvania, Croatia, Slavonia, and Dalmatia. The Roman Catholic church is dominant in the S. and W. of Europe, in Italy, Spain and Portugal, France, Belgium, a great part of Austria, and some of the smaller German states, Switzerland, and Ireland. The Protestant church prevails in Prussia, Saxony, Wurtemberg, Hanover, and several of the smaller German states, Denmark, Sweden, Norway, Switzerland, and England, as well as in parts of France and Austria, and in the Baltic provs. of Russia. Mohammedanism is confined to the inhabitants of Turkey.

N.W. from its entrance into the English Channel, 64 m. S.W. Bristol, with which it is connected by the Gt. W. railw. Area of city & co., which includes 19 pas., 1,800 ac. Pop. 31,312; of parl. bor. 37,231. It occupies an eminence in a richly diversified dist., has 2 main streets (each nearly 2 m. in length), & crossing at right angles; considerable remains of its anc. walls, a fine bridge across the Exe, many handsome modern squares & terraces intermixed with anc. narrow streets, 2 noble mkt.-places, and several suburbs containing numerous elegant villas. Chief buildings, the cathedral, probably commenced in 1280, and though of a severer style of architecture than the later cathedrals, surpassed by few in grandeur, or chasteness of proportion and of ornament. Its massive Norman towers over each transept, richly carved W. front, painted windows, colossal organ and bell, episcopal throne, chapter-ho., library, and numerous chapels, with the monuments of its bishops, and of the Bohurst Courtenays, deserve special mention. The bishop's palace was built in the reign of Edward iv.; the grammar school, founded in 1633, has an annual rev. exceeding 800*l.*, and about 15 exhibitions to the universities; there are numerous other well-endowed schools and ancient hospitals; a modern co. hospital, lunatic, blind, and deaf and dumb asylums, female penitentiary, infirmary, and work-house; a co. sessions-ho. within the yard of the ancient castle of Rougemont, of which vestiges remain; a co. and city gaol and bridewell, large cavalry and artillery barracks, an ancient guildhall containing some interesting portraits, a theatre, circus, baths, fine ball-room, beautiful park promenade, several fountains, a public library, museum, atheneum, mechanics' institution, scientific and literary institution, about 6 banks, 5 weekly newspapers, a custom-house, bonding-warehouse, & cloth-halls. Exeter is a great thoroughfare; excellent mkt.s., and a beautiful vicinity induces many to reside here. It has still some manufs. of serges, paper, &c., with large breweries and iron foundries; but its once immense trade has greatly declined, notwithstanding the recent improvements of the port, the forming of a large floating basin, and the deepening of the anc. ship canal to Topsham, by which vessels of 300 tons now approach the city. The heavy port dues, consequent upon these improvements, are said to check commerce. Customs duties (1846) 97,715*l.* Reg. shipping (1847) 176 vessels; aggreg. burden 16,285 tons. Mkts., Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday; that on Friday being the largest for corn & wool in the W. of England. Races in Aug. Corp. rev. (1847) 8,195*l.* Corp. debt, more than 2-3ds of which has been incurred by the ship canal, about 150,000*l.* Exeter has sent 2 mems. to H. of C. since 1286. Reg. electors (1847) 3,798. It is also the place of election for the S. division of the co. Its bishopric, fixed here in 1050 by Edward the Confessor, comprises 4 archdeaneries & about 640 benefices, occupying nearly the whole of Cornwall and Devon. Episcopal rev. (1831) 2,700*l.* Average rev. of dean and chapter (including 24 prebendaries), about 10,000*l.* Exeter gives title of Marquis to the Cecils. During the middle ages it sustained several sieges, and was noted for the number of its religious houses.

Shores greatly indented, and mostly low, afford many good harbours. Surface more lofty in the W. than in the E. portion of the group, but in the latter are some hills 1,700 feet above the sea. Clay slates of the silurian system constitute the greater part of the level country, and quartz rock the mountain summits. Climate temperate and healthy, but moist westerly winds, often very violent, prevail. Mean temperature of year 47°.2; summer 53°.3; winter 39°.9, Fahr. Grass lands are extremely luxuriant, and these isls. are well adapted for rearing live stock, already very numerous in a wild state. The tussock grass grows to the height of 6 feet. Shrub trees are the only timber. Peat is abundant to the depth of 10 ft. Some vegetables are raised in the settled parts, but little or no corn. The only indigenous quadruped is a large fox; sea-fowl are in considerable numbers; snipe, quails, hawks, &c., and a species of vulture are found in the isls. Copper and iron ores have been discovered; and seals and whales are plentiful around the coasts, and fish, especially cod, are abundant in the bays. These isls. form a convenient station for ships to procure provisions and fresh water, but are at present of little further value. An English garrison formerly stationed at Port Louis, Berkeley Sound, E. Falkland, is now removed to Stanley harbour, Port William. The remaining inhabitants are mostly Buenos-Ayrea colonists, with some Indians, Europeans, and occasionally the crews of whaling vessels. Value, in 1842, of exports to Great Britain, 3,729*l.*; of imports from do., 938*l.* Receipts and expenditure of the colony (1844) 6,179*l.* The Falkland isls. were discovered by Davis, in 1692, colonised by the French in 1763, taken by the Spaniards in 1767, and ceded in 1771 to the English, who have held uninterrupted possession of them only since 1833.

Lat. of light-house 38° 15' 50" N., lon. 15° 40' 40" E. On the hill above are two sea batteries and martello towers, the whole covered by a strong fort. The Faro-channel is a name given to the Strait of Messina, and the two great divisions of the Neapolitan dominions are accordingly called the Dominij-al-di-là (on this side), and Al-di-quà (beyond) di Faro.

FÄRÖER, or the FAROE ISLES, a group of isls. in the N. Sea belonging to Denmark, 180 m. N.W. of the Shetlands, between lat. 61° 20' and 62° 25' N., and lon. 6° 20' and 7° 40' W. They consist of 22 islands, of which 17 are inhabited, and extend 70 m. in length N. to S., and 46 m. in breadth E. to W. Pop. (1847) estimated at 7,800. Coasts steep and rugged, interior mountains, highest peaks, in Osteroe, 2,864, and in Stromoe, 2,430 feet. The channels which separate the islands afford several good bays. The islands enjoy all the advantages of an insular climate, and derive great benefit from the N. branch of the gulf stream, which, besides raising the temperature, carries to their shores considerable quantities of drift wood. The winters are extremely mild, so much so, that sheep and cattle require no housing. Summer moist and foggy. The longest day in summer is 20, and the shortest in winter 4 hours; but the length of the day is greatly extended by the morning and evening twilight, and by the aurora borealis. There is no timber on the islands, but turf is abundant. Barley is cultivated, but does not always ripen. Turnips and potatoes yield good crops. Most of the inhabitants are employed in the fisheries, of which that of a species of small whale is the most important; and in the preparation of wool. Sheep, of which there are 80,000, form the chief riches of the islanders. The horses are small but powerful; waggons are not employed. Sea-fowl are numerous; and feathers form a considerable article of commerce. Among minerals, the chief are fine opals and coal, the last especially in Süderöe. The people, of Norwegian descent, are robust and healthy; their spoken language is a dialect of the N. German, but their written language is Danish. The islands are governed by an antmann, who is also military commandant, a judge, and a provost. The trade is a royal monopoly; and half of the soil belongs to the king. The islands are divided into 7 parishes under 1 bishop. Thorshavn, on the S. coast of Strömöe (pop. 720), is the cap. and the only town. The chief islands are Strömöe, the central and largest of the group. Area 146 sq. m. Pop. 2,000; Bordše, pop. 300; Widerše, pop. 150; Osteroe, pop. 1,780; Waagoe, pop. 600; Sandöe 500; Sküöe 60; Suderöe, pop. 1,100.

Fo-kien, between lat. 22° and 25° 30' N., and lon. 121° E., about 90 m. from the Chinese coast, from which it is separated by the channel of Fo-kien, or Formosa. Estimated area 15,000 sq. m. The Chinese pop. are estimated at 2,000,000; the number of native inhabs. is unknown. A volcanic mntn. chain, with summits upwards of 12,000 ft. in height, traverses the centre of the isl. from N. to S., separating the Chinese colonists of its W. half from the native Formosans on the E. side. On some parts of the coasts are bold headlands, but all the W. side is flat, and surrounded with quicksands and rocks. Surface of the Chinese portion well watered and generally fertile, producing great quantities of rice, sugar, camphor, and tobacco, with wheat, maize, millet, various fruits and spices, coffee, cotton, hemp, silk, fine timber, and bamboos. The Chinese colonists are of a very mixed description, Formosa having been a kind of "Botany Bay" to China; but among them there are many wealthy and active traders; and a very extensive commerce is carried on with Amoy, & other parts of the opposite coast, to which all the shipping employed in the trade belongs. Principal exports, the products already detailed, with salt, and sulphur. Imports comprise tea, silks, woollens, and other manufactured goods. The native Formosans are a Malay race, little civilized, and living under petty chiefs. Formosa, with the Panghoë isls., forms a foo, or dep., under the prov. Fo-kien, subdivided into 5 heens, or dists. Its cap., Tae-wan, is a Chinese city of the first class; and its schools are in pretty high repute in China. It was the last conquest of the present Tartar dynasty, and has been always rather insecurely held by the Chinese. In 1632 the Dutch became masters of it, but they were expelled by the famous pirate Coxinga, whose successors ruled here till 1683. It was on Formosa that the Nerbudda transport, and the brig Ann were wrecked in 1841; and nearly all their snrvivors ultimately put to death with great cruelty by the Chinese.

The depts. marked thus * are situated on the sea coast, and those distinguished thus †, on the frontiers of the country.

In form France resembles an irregular hexagon, greatest length from the W. extremity of Finis-tère to the point of Antibes, in Var, 680 m., breadth from Givets (Ardennes) to Mt. Huromba (Lower Pyrenees), 585 miles.

Its principal islands are, Corsica, Hyeres, and Lerins, in the Mediterranean; Noirmoutier, Oleron, Ré, Belle-Isle, Dieu, Groix, Sein, and Ouessant, in the Atlantic. Chief peninsulas, Bretagne (Brittany) and Cotentin in the English Channel. The coasts of Brittany are indented by numerous arms of the sea, which form excellent harbours. The two great gulfs are the Golfe de Gascogne (Bay of Biscay) on the W., and G. du Lion (G. of Lions) on the S. The principal bays are Cancale and St Brienc on the N.; Brest road & the bays of Douarnenez and Audierne on the W. of Brittany; the bays of La Forest, and Quiberon, and Penfer road on the S. of Brittany; the bay of Bourgneuf S. of the mouth of the Loire; Basque roads or the bay of La Rochelle, & the basin of Arcachon, W. of the dep. Gironde, the roads of Toulon, Cavalaire, Grimand, Napoule, and Jouan, on the Mediterranean. The most remarkable capes are Gris-Nez in the English Channel, Cape Barfleurs and C. de la Hague in N. of dep. Manche; the Bec du Raz and the Pointe de Penmarch in Finistere. The mean height of France is about 816 feet; the N. depts. present vast plains, agreeably interspersed with hills; those on the S. and E. are mostly covered with mntns.—among these are—I., the Alps between France and Italy; the principal summits of which, in France, are Pelvoux 14,108 feet, Viso 12,692 ft., Genevre 11,785 ft., and Ventoux 6,263 ft.—II. the Pyrenees between France and Spain; the chief summits in France are, Perdn 10,994 ft., Midi 9,438 ft., and Canigou 9,137 ft.—III. the Cevennes in Languedoc; the highest points of which are Mezin 5,794 ft., and Lozere 4,884 ft.—IV. the mntns. of Auvergne, a branch of the Cevennes; the highest points of which are Mont Dor 6,188 ft., Cantal 6,093 ft., and the Puy-de-Dôme 4,806 ft.—V. the Jura between Franche Comté and Switzerland, in which the Reculet is 5,643 ft. The centre of France, comprising an 8th or 10th of its superficies, consists of plateaux from 1,200 to 1,900 ft. in elevation, which are separated by narrow valleys.—VI. the Vosges between Lorraine and Alsace; the summit of which is the Ballon d'Alsace 4,688 ft. The Vosges send contreforts into Franche-Comté and Champagne, and are connected with the Cevennes by a chain of heights which separate the basin of the Rhône from those of the Seine and Loire, & in Burgundy are called the Côte d'Or.

The coasts of the English Channel are generally bordered by sandy downs; those of Brittany are covered with rocks. S. of the mouth of the Gironde, is a vast extent of country covered with marshy lakes (etangs) and shifting sands. France is watered by a great number of important rivers, the four principal of which are the Seine, which flows N.W. to the English Channel, the Loire and the Garonne, which flow generally W. to the Atlantic Ocean, and the Rhone, which flows S. into the Mediterranean. The other principal rivers are the Rhine, Moselle, Meuse, Saambre, Scheldt, and Lys, which contribute their waters to the basin of the North Sea, but have only a part of their course in France. The Somme, Orne, Yonne, Marne, Oise, Aisne, and Eure in the basin of the English Channel; the Blavet, Vilaine, Sèvre-Niortaise, Charente, Adour, Allier, Cher, Indre, Vienne, Creuse, Mayenne, Sarthe, Loire, Ariege, Tarn, Gers, Lot, Dordogne, and l'Isle in the basin of the Atlantic; the Aude, Herault, Ain, Saône, Doubs, Isere, and Durance in the basin of the Mediterranean. The different basins, and most of the principal rivers are connected by canals. It is calculated that France has 133 navigable rivers, extending to 8,000 m. France has few lakes, but on its S.E. and S.W. coasts numerous marshes and lagoons, many of which communicate with the sea by narrow channels. The roads of France are divided into national, departmental, and communal roads; the first are paved and kept in excellent order, & the whole have been much improved within the last 20 years. A vast system of railways has been projected to extend from Paris as a centre, to the extremities of the country in all directions. Of these only the following were in operation in 1849:

The above, with several short mineral lines, constitute a total of 1,413 miles in operation in 1849.

There are six lines of Telegraphs all radiating from Paris, viz., to Calais, Strasbourg, Brest, Toulon, Bayonne, and Havre.

France is comprised between the isotherm lines of 50° & 60° of Fahr.; its surface is little elevated, & its climate is in general temp., mild, & healthy. In the N., the winters are sometimes rigorous, and last more than half the year (mean temp. 50°. Fabr.); in the S., the summers are long and warm, the sky almost always serene, and the winters of short duration (mean temp. 60°. Fabr.); in the centre, the temperature is mild and more steady than in the N. and S. (mean temp. 58°. Fabr.); mean annual quantity of rain in S. 23., W. 24., N. 22., valley of Rhone 35, inches. Number of rainy days between lat. 43° and 46°, 134; in the lat. of Paris 105, on the coasts of the Mediterranean 66, and on the Atlantic 152; in the interior 147. Along the coasts of the Mediterranean the S. winds, heated by the burning desert of Africa, often spread desolation. The mistral, a glacial wind from the N.N.W., occasionally arrests vegetation by its furious blasts in the basin of the Rhone, while the E. wind from the snowy alps is equally dreaded in the E. deps. The basin of the Garonne is visited by cold S. winds from the Pyrenees, and by storms from the Bay of Biscay. The air is most moist, and rain most frequent, on the western coasts. The vegetable productions of France are abundant and most varied; they comprise wheat and other cereals, potatoes, truffles, beet-root, from which a great quantity of sugar is manufactured; vines, which cover more than a 27th part of the superficies of the country, and furnish excellent wine, the most celebrated of which is that of Burgundy, Champagne, and Bordeaux; olive oil, the mulberry, lint, hemp, tobacco, hops, medicinal plants, and dye woods. Among fruit trees, the apple, pear, cherry, walnut, chestnut, and almond abound. The orange, citron, olive, fig, pomegranate, and the pistachio are confined to the delicious regions of the S., along the shores of the Mediterranean. France furnishes excellent timber for ship-building and carpentry, and the cork-tree abounds in the S. The principal forests are those of Ardenne, Orleans, Fontainebleau, and Compeigne; it is calculated that 1-8th of the superficies is covered with wood. Among wild animals are the bear, wolf, fox, wild cat, wild boar, stag, roe-buck, fallow deer, the chamois, hare, rabbit, and heaver. The most common domestic animals are the horse, mule, ass, oxen, sheep, goats, pigs, and numerous fowls. Among birds, the most common are the eagle, falcon, huzzard, partridge, quail, and lark. Fish abound on the coasts, the most common are, in the Atlantic and English Channel, the herring, turbot, sole, whiting, pilchard; and salmon in the estuaries; lobsters, mussels, and rich banks of oysters are plenty on these coasts. The Mediterranean contains peculiar species of fish, as the tunny & anchovy. The honey bee is extensively reared; and silk worms form one of the principal sources of wealth; the kermes (Coccus Ilicis), which is found near the shores of the Mediterranean, furnishes a crimson dye. France possesses excellent building stones, and quarries of marble, alabaster, slate, & a few precious stones. The most important minerals are iron, which is found nearly over the whole country; copper, lead, silver, as well as antimony, sulphur, sulphate of iron, & mineral waters; the gold mines are insignificant. The coal and salt mines are of great value. There are 88 coal, anthracite, & lignite basins in France, the richest of which are the basin of the Loire and that of Valenciennes in the dep. Nord. In 1845 there were 449 coal mines worked and unworked, employing 30,778 miners, & producing 4,141,617 tons of mineral fuel. The salt marshes are a considerable source of wealth.

France is essentially an agricultural country. Since the commencement of the present century the cultivation of the soil has made remarkable progress, and in several deps. has been brought to great perfection. The progress of the industrial arts has been no less rapid during the same period; iron and coal mining has been annually on the increase; nearly 1,000 separate factories have been engaged in the fusion of metals, and the forging and manufacturing of iron and steel. The most important manufs. are those of arms, jewellery, watches, coach building, cabinet making, musical instruments, glass, crystal, pottery, chemical products, beet-root sugar, oil, soap, sugar, and salt refineries; dye-works, tanneries, paper making, & printing; silks, cottons, woollen cloths, carpets, shawls, and lace. The products of manuf. industry, with those of the soil, form the objects of an immense internal commerce. External commerce is much less important. Total amount of exports and imports in 1844, 2,340,000,000 francs (93,600,000l.). The principal ports are Marseille, Havre, Bordeaux, Nantes, La Rochelle, Dunkerque, Boulogne, Dieppe, St Malo, L'orient, Bayonne, and Cette. The countries with which the chief commercial relations are conducted, are the French colonies, Belgium, Switzerland, Sardinia, England, Germany, Spain, and especially the United States of N. America, the imports from, and exports to which, in 1847, amounted to 1-6th of the whole external commerce of the country.

In ancient times France formed the greater part of Transalpine Gaul. It was subjugated by Cæsar in the year 50 B. C., and formed 17 Roman provs. In the 5th century, the Franks established themselves in the N., the Burgundians in the E., and the Visigoths in the S. In the 6th century, the Franks extended their dominions nearly over the whole of Gaul, but Brittany Gascony, and Languedoc preserved their independence. The power of the Franks continued to increase, and under Charlemagne, at the end of the 8th century, their empire extended in Germany N. to the Elbe, and S.E. to the Theiss, in Italy to Volturno, and in Spain to the Ebro. This empire was partitioned in the middle of the 9th cent., when Germany detached itself from Gaul, which last was divided into two parts.—I. The kingdom of France, comprised between the Ocean, the Pyrenees, the Mediterranean, the Rhône, Saône, Meuse, and Scheldt.—II. Lotharingia, a long strip of territory between the Rhine and the Alps on one side, and the Scheldt, Meuse, Saône, and Rhône on the other; to this Italy was added. This state was soon again divided into the kingdom of Italy, Lorraine, and the kingdom of Provence or Burgundy, called also kingdom of Arles. These three states were successively united, nominally, to the Germanic Empire. The kingdom of France was also parcelled out into feudal duchies, & numerous seigneuries, so that the king had only an empty title before the family of Hughes-Capet, who ascended the throne in 987, succeeded in uniting round their small territory the different states of France; this process of concentration progressed under succeeding reigns, and was completed at the revolution of 1798, which subjected to equal laws the 33 govts. or provs. of which the monarchy was then composed, and divided them into 83 departments. Avignon and Venassin, which had been in the possession of the Popes for 5 centuries, were soon after united to France. The wars of the revolution rapidly increased the territory of the French republic. Belgium, all the countries of Germany situated to the left of the Rhine, Savoy, & Nice, were conquered, and formed into 16 new departments. This state of matters, confirmed by the treaty of Lunéville in 1801, and by that of Amiens in 1802, gave to France its natural limits, those of anc. Transalpine Gaul; but the conquests of Napoleon overstepped these bounds,—his empire extended in Italy to Garigliano, in Germany to the mouths of the Elbe, in Illyria to the Save and Cattaro, and included Holland. The secondary states of Germany, Switzerland, the kingdoms of Naples and Spain became his vassals rather than his allies. This gigantic extension raised the whole of Europe against France, which, by the treaties of 1814-15, was again confined to its former limits. The most remarkable events in the history of France since the abdication of Napoleon are, the restoration of the Bourbons in 1815, the abdication of Charles x. in 1830, the election of Louis Philippe, Duke of Orleans, as king of the French in 1830, the revolution and his abdication in February 1848, and the proclamation of a republic, and the election of Louis Napoleon as president in 1849. The language employed in the acts of administration is the French, which is spoken by all the educated classes, & understood by nearly all the pop. The patois of many of the depts. are only corrupt dialects of the French; but German is spoken in Alsace and part of Lorraine, Flemish in part of the dep. Nord, bas-breton in Brittany, Basque in Lower Pyrenees, and Italian in Corsica. The maajority of the pop. are Roman Catholics; about 1,000,000 belong to the reformed church; there are 500,000 Lutherans, and 70,000 Jews. France is now divided into 86 depts., 85 of which are on the continent, and the island of Corsica forms the 86th. These were formed from the 32 provs. which existed previous to 1798, & named from the rivs., mntns., & other peculiar features which occur in them. The depts. are subdivided into arrondissements, cantons, & communes; each dep. is governed by a prefect, each arrond. by a sub-prefect, & each comm. by a mayor. There are 80 Roman Catholic dioceses, each administered by an archbishop or a bishop, and each cap. of a canton has a curate, each diocese has a seminary under the direction of the bishop. The Lutherans have a general consistory established at Strasbourg, where they have also a seminary and a faculty of theology. The Calvinists have consistorial churches in 59 depts., who meet occasionally in synod, & have a faculty of theology at Montauban. The Jews have a central consistory at Paris, and synagogues at Paris, Strasbourg, Colmar, Metz, Nancy, Bordeaux, and Marseille. For the administration of justice, the country is divided into 27 ressorts de cours national; there is in each canton a juge de paix, & in each arrond. a tribunal of premiere instance. In each chief commercial town there is a tribunal of commerce. The faculty of theology has six schools; at Paris, Aix, Bordeaux, Lyon, Rouen, & Toulouse; a Lutheran school at Strasbourg, & a Calvinist school at Montauban. The faculty of law has 9 schools, at Paris, Aix, Caen, Dijon, Grenoble, Poitiers, Rennes, Strasbourg, and Toulouse. The faculty of medicine has 3 schools of medicine; at Paris, Montpellier, and Strasbourg, and three schools of pharmacy in the same cities. Secondary instruction is given in national and communal colleges. There is a national college in most of the large cities, and communal colleges in numerous other towns. A normal school is established in Paris for training teachers in the sciences and belles-lettres. Primary instruction is imparted gratuitously in numerous schools supported by the communes, and the teachers for these are trained in the normal schools. The number of pupils average 1 to 11 of the pop. For military purposes, France is partitioned into 21 divisions, of which each department forms a subdivision, except Corsica, which forms 2 subdivisions. For the marine, France is divided into 5 maritime prefectures, which are subdivided into arronds. and inscriptions. The administration of forests is divided into 32 arronds., embracing the principal towns in the different depts. In 1848, the French army consisted of 502,715 men, of whom 100,293 were cavalry. At the same date the navy comprised 24 ships of the line, 40 frigates, 36 corvettes, 48 brigs, 78 transports and boats, in all 226 sailing vessels and 91 steamers, comprising 14 frigates, 24 corvettes, & 53 smaller vessels. The revenue of France, in 1848, was estimated at 1,370,978,010 fr.; in 1843, it was 1,423,649,000 francs; during 10 years previous, it had been increasing at the rate of 26 million francs annually. It is a little less than the revenue of Great Britain, but much greater than that of all other countries—more than that of Austria & Russia together, and more than 10 times that of Belgium or Spain. Public debt, in 1848, 413,902,844 francs. In 1848 the revenue was 1,487,324,818 fr., and the expenditure 1,817,642,708 francs, leaving a deficit of 230,317,890 francs.

The colonies and foreign dependencies of France are, in America, the islands Martinique, Guadeloupe, Marie-Galante, Desirade, Saintes, a part of St Martin, in the Antilles, French Guiana and Cayenne, St Pierre & Miquelon, near Newfoundland, at the mouth of the St Lawrence; Africa, Algeria, Senegal, and Goree on the W. coast, and the islands Bourbon and St Marie in the Indian Ocean, certain portions of Madagascar, and (since 1843) the islands Mayotta and Nossi-Bé. In 1843, France also took possession of Assinie at the W. of the gold coast of Guinea; Asia, Pondicherry and Karikal on the Coromandel coast, Mahé on the coast of Malabar, Yanaon in Orissa, and Chandernagore in Bengal; Pacific Ocean, the two groups of the Marquesas & Tahiti, taken possession of in 1841. The colonies are subjected to special laws. In 1845, an ordinance was passed, having for its object the amelioration of slavery in the French colonies, and in 1848, the provisional government decreed its total abolition.

Area 15,897 sq. m. Pop. (1833) 1,472,786. Surface generally mountainous; principal rivers, the Minho, Sil, and Ulla. Coast line very irregular, and presents the capes Finisterre, Ortegal, and Estaca, with the bays of Ferrol, Betanzos, Coruña, Pontevedra, and Vigo. Climate temperate; rain more abundant than in any other part of Spain. Forests extensive, and feed large herds of hogs; there are also good pasture lands, and wide tracts of heath. Chestnuts, maize, rye, flax, potatoes, wheat, barley, & inferior wine, form the principal vegetable products; the first compose most part of the food of the Galicians; the rest are partly exported. Sheep and horses are extensively reared. Mineral products comprise copper, lead, tin, antimony, marble, and jasper. Some pilchard-fisheries are carried on, and a few unimportant manufs. of woollens, linens, sail-cloth, &c. The mass of the Galicians or Gallegos are very poor, ignorant, and uncivilized, but hardy and industrious; and they make the best agricultural labourers, soldiers, and domestic servants in the peninsula. Many emigrate yearly into other parts of Spain and Portugal; and the porters & water-carriers of Madrid, Lisbon, &c., are usually from this part of Spain. Cap. city, Santiago.

GALICIA and LODOMERIA, or AUSTRIAN POLAND (German Galizien and Lodomerien), a kingdom or prov. of the Austrian Empire, cap. Lemberg, lies in the form of a terrace on the N. slope of the Carpathian mtns. It is bounded W. by Silesia, S. by Hungary and Transylvania, E. by Moldavia and Russia, & N. by Russia, Poland, & Prussia. Area 33,538 sq. m. Pop. (1842) 4,910,629, including 220,000 Jews. The chief rivs. are the Vistula with its affls., the Biala, W.yslodka, & San; the Bug, Dniester, & Pruth; there are numerous small lakes in the Carpathians. The surface in the N. comprises wide and fertile plains, while in the S. it is covered with sandstone hills, which spread out from the Carpathians far into the interior. Climate the most rigorous in the empire, on account of the continuous chain of mtns. which interrupt the mild southerly breezes. Summer is of short duration, and winter, which is very cold, lasts six months. Mean annual temp. in the plain 45°. Fabr. The principal crops are oats, wheat, barley, and maize. Flax, hemp, & tobacco are also cultivated. Cattle are extensively reared, and horses are numerous, and of a hardy breed. Sheep and horses are the chief stock in the Bukowia (the S.E. part of the kingdom). Bees are extensively kept, and honey & wax are exported. Minerals comprise marble, alabaster, sulphur, iron, coal, copper, zinc, but the most remarkable mineral production is fossil salt, the bed of which extends for 285 m. along the Carpathians from E. to W., and which, in the salt works of Wieliczka and Bochnia, has been worked since A. D. 1300; and there are numerous mineral springs. The only manufs. of importance are spinning & weaving flaxen & hempen fabrics. Brandy distilleries are numerous. The inhabs. are of Slavonic origin, and speak the Polish language; there are 220,000 Jews, mostly merchants and distillers, the others are divided among the Roman Catholic & Greek churches, and a few Protestants. Education is in a backward state, but there is a university at Lemberg; there are numerous hospitals & charitable institutions; the chief criminal court is at Lemberg. The kingdom is divided into 19 circles, comprising 96 towns, 193 market towns, & 6,060 villages. Galicia, formerly comprised in Red Russia, derives its name from Galitz or Halicz, a town on the Dniester, which was cap. of an indep. principality in the middle ages, & Lodomeria takes its name from Vladimir in Volhynia, which was also cap. of a duchy. This country, which was long possessed by the Poles, was made over to Austria in the partition of the country in 1772 and 1795.

GENEVA (Fr. Geneve, Germ. Genf, Ital. Ginevra), a walled town of Switzerland, cap. cant. same name, 83 m. S.W. Bern, finely situated on the Rhone, at its outlet from the W. extremity of the Lake of Geneva. Lat. of old observatory 46° 12' N., lon. 6° 9' 5" E. Elevation 1,230 feet. Mean temp. of year 52°.7; winter 34°; sum. 66°.4 Fahr. Pop. (1838) 28,000. Geneva, the most populous and industrious town in Switzerland, is the seat of the central administration of the canton, and has a Gothic cathedral, a university academy, founded by Calvin in 1368, with a faculty of theology, laws, sciences, and letters; a college with 16 professors & teachers, school of arts & manufs., a public library of 40,000 vols., and a large collection of curious MSS., a botanic garden, begun by de Candolle in 1816, observatory, museum of natural history, Calvinist, Lutheran, and Roman Catholic churches, & a synagogue. Many learned societies and benevolent institutions. The Rhone divides the town into 2 parts, the smaller portion on r. b. is called the Quartier St Gervais, the principal seat of trade; between them is "the island," a favourite promenade, with a statue of Rousseau, and commanding a fine view of the lake, connected with the town by several bridges. A hydraulic machine raises the water of the Rhone for the supply of the public fountains. The principal manufs. of Geneva are watches, musical boxes, chronometers, mathematical instruments, jewellery, cutlery, fire-arms, & musical instruments. The manuf. of watches employs 3,000 workmen, the annual produce being 100,000 watches, nearly all gold. Geneva has an excellent quay along the river, an active transit trade on the lake, and steam conveyances with Villeneuve, Coppet, Nyon, Rolles, Ouchy, and Vevey. Few towns of its extent have produced, or adopted, so many learned men, as Geneva; among these are Calvin, Beza, Cranmer, Lessage, Saussure, de Luc, Lefort, Necker, and Rousseau. John Knox was long a resident here. Geneva, one of the chief towns of the Allobroges in the time of Cæsar, was subject to the Romans till the beginning of the 5th century. It was cap. of the 2d kingdom of Bourgogne till 1034, & was under the sovereignty of the Emperor of Germany till the beginning of the 16th cent. Calvin introduced the reformation here in 1536, and from that time Geneva, a free city, was considered the chief seat of Calvinism. It was taken by the French in 1798, and formed, till 1813, cap. of the dep. Lemane in the French Empire. In 1814, along with a small territory, it joined the Helvetic confed.—The Canton of Geneva is composed of the former republic of Geneva and part of the county of Gex in Savoy, bounded N. by the cant. Lat. of lighthouse 44° 24' 18" N., lon. 8° 54' 24" E. Pop. (1838) 115,257, including the garrison, seamen & pop. of the port, amounting together to 17,636. Mean temp. of year 75°.1; winter 47°.3; summer 75°.1 Fahr. The port, protected seaward by two vast moles, is surrounded landward by the city; which extends up the slope of a mntn. amphitheatre, successively enclosed by two series of walls, outside of which are numerous elegant country houses; the whole embraced by a line of detached forts and outworks, crowning the hills for a circuit of about 7 m. In the older part of the city the streets are steep and very narrow, but in the newer portions broad and straight; & they are generally clean, well paved, and lined by lofty and magnificent edifices. Genoa has justly acquired the title "la Superba," for, though possessing fewer remains of ancient splendour than Venice, it exhibits more wealth and comfort. Among its principal edifices are the Doria-Pamfilii, the Royal Ducal, Brignole, Durazzo, Serra, Spinola, Balbi, Pallavicini, and numerous other fine palaces, all rich in choice works of art; the cathedral, a gorgeous Saraceno-Gothic structure of the 11th century, numerous other handsome churches (though many were destroyed by the French), the university, with a large library and botanic garden, the Albergo de Poveri, a vast asylum for about 1,600 poor persons, two other large hospitals, 15 conservatorie, or female asylums, numerous convents, the exchange, bank of St George, one of the most anc. and celebrated in Europe, arsenal, lighthouse, quays, & a bridge over a part of the city. Genoa is an archbp's. see, the residence of a general commandant, and the seat of an admiralty council, and a tribunal and chamber of commerce. It has a royal college, a naval and various other schools, and important manufs. of velvet, silks, damask thrown silk, paper, soap, &c., with marble, alabaster, and coral works. It is a free port, and the great entrepot of a large extent of country, the produce of which, comprising olive oil, rice, fruits, cheese, rags, steel, &c., with manufd. goods, form the chief exports. Principal imports, cotton and woollen stuffs, cotton wool from Egypt, corn, salt fish, colonial and Baltic produce, hardware and tin plates from England, wool, tobacco, lead, wax, &c. From the 11th down to the 18th century, Genoa was, with some interruptions, the cap. of a famous commercial republic, which planted numerous colonies in the Levant and on the shores of the Black Sea; but the annals of which are marked by the greatest turbulence. It was taken by the French in 1797, and ceded to the King of Sardinia in 1815.—II. (Gulf of), a wide bay of the Mediterranean, N. of Corsica, and S. of the Sard. sta., forming an angle, near the summit of which Genoa is situated. It receives numerous small rivers. The Gulf of Spezzia is its chief inlet.

GEORGIA, or GEUSIA, a gov. of Russia, in the Caucasus country, W. Asia, composing the central & W. portion of Transcaucasia, between lat. 40° and 42° 30' N., and lon. 43° and 47° E. Area 21,500 sq. m. Pop. (according to census of 1836) about 400,000, mostly christians of the Greek Church. Surface generally mntns.; but its centre, traversed by the Kur and its affls., is an undulating and very fertile plain. Corn of numerous kinds, pomegranates and other fine fruits, madder, flax, hemp, cotton, and wine, are among the principal products; wine is naturally good, but ill prepared, and a great quantity is consumed in Georgia. Forests extensive, and consist of most of the trees common in Europe, but they are turned to little profit. Coal, iron, naphtha, and other valuable minerals are supposed to be abundant, but few mines are wrought. The houses, vehicles, &c., are of the rudest kinds, and education in every respect is very backward. Some woollen, cotton, and silk fabrics, leather, shagreen, &c., are made, and the arms produced at Teflis have some reputation, but except these, the wares manufactured are very inferior. The Georgians are a peculiarly handsome race of people, and the females were formerly sold in large numbers to supply the harems of the Turks and Persians, but the Russians have put an end to this traffic. The Georgian language resembles that of Armenia, with the addition of many foreign words. Principal towns, Teflis the cap., Elisabethpol, Gori, and Telav. Georgia was annexed to Russia in 1802.

GEORGIA, one of the U. S., N. Amer., in the S. part of the Union, between lat. 30° 30' and 35° N., and lon. 81° and 85° 50' W., having E. South Carolina and the Atlantic Ocean, S. Florida, W. Alabama, and N. Tennessee and North Carolina. Length 300 m. by 240 m. Area 60,000 sq. m. Pop. (1800) 162,686, (1850) 905,999, of whom 369,966 are slaves. The coast is bordered by a chain of islands, on which the famous sea-island cotton is raised. Surface of the mainland low & level for 60 or 60 m. inland, beyond which is a pine-barren region, rising in the W. and N. into the Appalachian mountain chain, which is here in some places 1,500 feet above the sea. Principal rivers, the Altamaha, the Savannah, forming all the N.E., and the Chattahoochee most part of its W. boundary. A large proportion of the soil is very fertile, but in the low country are extensive swamps. Winters mild, snow rarely seen; low country unhealthy in autumn, but high grounds salubrious. Hurricanes are frequent. In 1840, nearly 21 millions bushels of maize, and 73,000 tons of cotton, were estimated to have been raised, the crop of the latter having been greater than in any other state, except Mississippi. Wheat, oats, rice, indigo, sugar, coffee, and silk, are other principal crops. Grapes, oranges, melons, pomegranates, and many tropical fruits are raised; copper, iron, and in the N. considerable quantities of gold are obtained; the supply of the latter is, however, declining. Manufactures of little importance. Value of exports (1844) 4,283,805 dolls.; do. of imports (direct) 305,634 dolls., but the import trade is mostly carried on through Charleston (which see). The Georgia railw. extends from Augusta, 165 m., to De Kalb co., from whence the Western & Atlantic railway extends 140 m. to Challoanooga central railway, from Savannah to Macon 197 m., Macon to Whitehall 101 m. The state is divided into 93 cos. Present constitution formed in 1798, and amended in 1839, consists of a governor elected for two years, a senate of 47 members, house of representatives 130 members. Public revenue (1844) 307,917 dolls.; expenditure 295,999 dolls.; debt 1,725,138 dolls. Georgia sends 8 representatives to Congress. Principal towns, Milledgeville the cap., Augusta and Savannah. Georgia was so named in honour of George II., in 1753.

GERMANIC CONFEDERATION. [GERMANY.]

GERMANY (German Deutschland, French Allemagne, ancient Germania), a country of Central Europe, between lat. 44° 48' & 54° 50' N., & lon. 6° and 20° E.; within these limits it comprises all the countries belonging to the late Germanic confederation, consisting of 38 sovereignties (including four free cities); bounded N. by the German Ocean, Denmark, and the Baltic; E. by Prussian Posen, Poland, Galicia, Hungary, and Croatia; S. by Istria, the Adriatic, Italy and Switzerland; W. by France, Belgium, and the Netherlands. Area 244,634 sq. m., of which 600 m. is washed by the German Ocean and the Baltic, and 25 m. by the Adriatic. Germany is divided naturally into three regions,—the upper or S. region, the middle or the region of plateaux, and the lower or N. region. The chain of the Alps, which covers the whole of the S. part, comprises five principal groups,—on the Rhetian Alps, the chief ramifications of which follow the course of the Inn on the N., and branch out to the Bavarian Alps and the mountains of Vorarlberg, and extend W. to the Lake of Constance and the Schwarzwald, near the source of the Danube. Culminating points, Ortler Spitz, and Doedberg.—II. the Noric alps, over an extent of 130 m., the contreforts of which form the Styrian and Austrian Alps, extending to the Danube. Culminating point, Gross Glockner, 12,425 feet.—III. Carnic Alps, between the sources of the Drave & the Col de Saisnitz. Culminating point, Marmolata, 11,483 feet.—IV. Julian Alps, from the Col de Saisnitz to Mount Kleck in Carniola, 143 m. Culminating point, Terglou, 11,154 feet.—V. Dinaric Alps, which are prolonged to Dalmatia and Herzegovina. The chain of the Carpathians commence at the mouth of the March in the Danube, and extend to the source of the Vistula, forming the S.E. confines of Germany. Culminating point, Lomnitzer Spitz, 8,779 feet. On the W. of Germany, & at the extremity of the Alpine range, which passes between the Danube and the Lake of Constance, a chain of heights extend N. to the plain of Westphalia, separating the basin of the Rhine from that of the other affluents of the German Ocean. Its principal masses are the Schwarzwald (Black Forest), between the valley of the Rhine and Neckar. Culminating point, the Feldberg. The Odenwald-Rhöngebirge and the Vögelgebirge, the Taunus and Westerwald. On the S. of the Rhine, the chief mountains are Hardt and Hohewald. The Fichtelgebirge in the N. of Bavaria, separates the basins of the affluents of the German Ocean and the Black Sea, and forms the nucleus of the Erzgebirge, the Böhmerwald, the German Jura, and the Thuringenwald. The whole of the country comprised between the mountains on the S., and the German Ocean and Baltic on the N., forms part of the great plain of N. Europe, and is traversed by great rivers, which extend W. to the Netherlands, and E. to Poland and Russia. The N. coasts are low, and require the protection of dykes, where not defended by sand hills; the N.W. part, below the mouths of the Ems and Eider, is bathed by the German Ocean. The principal gulfs are the Dollart and the Jahde. The N.E. part, between the canal of the Eider and the outlet of Lake Tsarnowitz, is bathed by the Baltic. Its principal gulf is the Haff formed by the estuary of the Oder. On this coast, and separated from it by a narrow arm of the sea, are the 3 great isls. of Germany, Rügen, Usedom, and Wollin. The S. coasts bathed by the Adriatic, are flat in the W., high and rocky in the E.

The waters of Germany flow N. to the German Ocean and the Baltic, S. to the Adriatic, and E. to the Black Sea. Its principal rivers, in the basin of the German Ocean, are the Rhine, with its affluents the Neckar, Main, Rednitz, Lahn, Sieg, Rnhr, and Lippe on right, & the Nahe, Moselle, Saar, & Sure on the left; the Ems, Weser, Werra, Fulda, Elbe, with its affluents the Moldau, Eger, Mulde, Saale on left, and Iser, Alster Havel, on right; in the basin of the Baltic, the Oder, with its affluents the Oppa, Neissa, Katzbach on left, and Bartsch, Wartha, and Inna on right; in the basin of the Black Sea, the Danube, with its affluents the Iller, Lech, Isar, Inn, Traun, Ens, Leytha, Raab, Drave, & Save on right, and Wernitz, Altmuhl, Naab, Regen, March, & Theiss on left. The chief canals are, the Planen, connecting the Elbe & Oder by means of the Havel riv.; the Finow canal, betw. the Havel & Oder, the Fred. William canal, betw. the Oder & Spree; the Eider canal, connecting the Baltic and the North Sea; the Vienna canal (in progress), to connect the Danube with the Adriatic; and Ludwigs canal, between the Rhine and Danube.

The lakes of Germany belong to the Alpine regions, in the basins of the Rhine and Danube on the S., and the plain of the Baltic on the N. There are few in the centre. The principal are in the Alps,—the Lake of Constance, the Chiem See, Wurm See, Ammer See, Lake of Gmunden, Aller See, Mond and Trann See, and the Werther and Zirknitz See. These are mostly deep basins, surrounded by mountains, as in Switzerland. The lakes of N. Germany are of quite an opposite character, being mostly shallow marshes in the nearly level plains. The chief of these are the Eucier and Plöner See in Holstein; the Malchiner, Plauen, and Mauritz See in Mecklenburg; the Ruppiner and Ucker See in the Mark; and the Madue, Vilin, and Streizig See in Pomerania. Germany is partitioned into numerous small states, which, from 1815 to 1848, formed the Germanic confederation, and now comprise the Germanic Empire.

The following table shows the extent and pop. of the countries (including portions of Austria, Prussia, Denmark, and the Netherlands), forming the Germanic Empire in 1849:

The climate of Germany is in general temperate and healthy; it varies greatly in different quarters. S. Germany, notwithstanding the heat of its valleys is, on account of its elevation, proportionally colder than the more N. basins of the Rhine, Main, Neckar, Moselle, and Danube. Further N., the mountains of Central Germany separate the climates of the S. and N. In S. Germany the winters are short and so mild, that snow lies only a few days; summer sets in early, and the heat in the valleys is often excessive, & here maize, the chestnut, and the vine, flourish. In the N.W., the cold of the long winters is so severe, that the rivers and lakes are for months together covered with ice strong enough to bear loaded waggons, and the ground is for 3 or 4 months covered with deep snow.

The mineral riches of Germany are extensive and varied. Gold (in small quantity) and silver occur in Saxony, Bohemia, and in the Harz. Iron is widely distributed and very abundant. Copper to the extent of about 100,000 cwt. annually. Tin, lead, mercury (of which there are celebrated mines in Idria), bismuth, zinc, arsenic, cobalt, antimony; all kinds of building marble, & many of the precious stones; porcelain clay, coal, turf, and salt in numerous springs and rich mines, nearly 60 of which are in operation. Germany is celebrated for the number and variety of its mineral springs. The vegetable products of Germany comprise all kinds of cereals, the chief of which, in the N., are wheat, rye, barley, oats, and especially buckwheat; in the S., spelt and maize, garden produce of all kinds, and potatoes (which are best in the N.). The principal plants used in manufs. are flax, in Silesia, Saxony, Thuringia, Hanover, Westphalia; hemp chiefly in S. Germany. Tobacco, hops, rape seed, poppy, madder, saffron, aniseed, coriander, liquorice; the cultivation of beet root for the manuf. of sugar, has been lately much extended. Fruit trees comprise the apple, pear, chestnut, almond, walnut, and apricot. The vine, first introduced by the Romans, is cultivated to lat. 51° N., but chiefly in the valley of the Middle Rhine and on the Danube, in Lower Austria, and in the valleys of the Mosel, Neckar, and Main. Timber is very extensively distributed, especially in the N.E., not only on the mountains (from the wooded character of which the word "Wald" (wood) is often used for mountain), but also in the plains. The pine prevails in the E., the oak & beech in the W.

Germany is abundantly provided with all the useful domestic animals; horned cattle are excellent in Friesland and Franconia; horses in Holstein, Mecklenburg, and Hanover; sheep in Saxony, Silesia, Bohemia, and Thuringia; pigs in Westphalia, Mecklenburg, & Salzburg; asses and mules are not numerous. Among wild animals are the bear, the chamois, and the marmot in the Alps; the wolf is most abundant in the valley of the Rhine; the hamster in the Harz; the lynx, fox, martin, and weasel generally. The eagle and vulture are chiefly found in the Alps; geese in Pomerania; pheasants in Bohemia. Fish are less abundant in the German rivers than formerly; the most common are carp, pike, perch, eels, and trout. Bees are very generally reared, especially in the northern woodlands. The silkworm is not extensively cultivated.

The inhabs. of Germany belong chiefly to the Teutonic race and a mixture of the Slavonian. To the first, belong the pop. of Thuringia, Hessen, Franconia, Swabia, Bavaria, & part of Carinthia, Upper Styria, Austria, Tyrol, Brandenburg, the countries of the Middle and Lower Rhine, extending to France and the Netherlands, besides the Saxons in Westphalia, Holstein, Lower Saxony, and Friesland on the German Ocean; and to the second, the inhabitants of Upper Saxony, Mecklenburg, Pomerania, Silesia, Moravia, Lausatia, part of Bohemia, Styria, and Carniola. The Magyars are a distinct race, probably of Finnish or Hunnish descent. Among these are mixed French, since the revocation of the edict of Nantes, and many Jews and Italians in the S. part of the Tyrol and Illyria. The rich and powerful German language is everywhere predominant; it is divided into high and low German, the first of which is the chief written language. With the exception of Jews, the pop. of Germany, belong either to the Protestant or the Roman Catholic church. Protestants (Lutheran and Reformed) prevail in the N., and Roman Catholics in the S. General education in Germany is of a higher order than in any other country of Europe; in many of the states the common schools are excellent, especially in Saxony and Thuringia. In 1840, the 19 universities of Germany (exclusive of Austria) had 11,389 pupils. There are numerous gymnasia, lyceums, academies, learned societies, and richly furnished public libraries in the different states. The advantages derived from these noble institutions are apparent in the great activity exhibited in every branch of literature and science, & in the importance of the German book trade. Architecture, printing, and the preparation of astronomical & optical instruments have attained great excellence. The chief branches of industry are agriculture, cattle rearing, and mining. Germany is not generally a manufacturing country, in so far as steam-power is concerned, but many parts, especially Silesia, Bohemia, Lausatia, Hanover, Westphalia, and Hesse, are distinguished for the manuf. of linens. The other manufs. comprise woollens in Austria, Saxony, Rhenish Prussia; iron, steel, & other metals in Styria, Carinthia, Silesia, Saxony, Thuringia, the Harz, Rhenish Prussia, and Nassau; gold and silver work in Augsburg; wooden wares, clocks, and toys in the Schwarzwald; glass in Bohemia; porcelain in Saxony, Prussia and Austria. Leather is an important manuf. all over Germany. Breweries and brandy distilleries are numerous, especially in the N. The manuf. of cotton is important in Rhenish Prussia, Saxony, and Lower Austria, and silk in Vienna, S. Tyrol, Berlin, and Cologne. Tobacco manufs. are numerous, and the manufs. of paper and straw goods are important. The trade of Germany, formerly greatly trammelled by the different rates of duties and customs levied by the separate states, has recently received a fresh impulse from the institution of the German commercial customs' union (Zollverein), by which the sev. states agree to a uniform rate of charges in transport duties and postages, and a fixed rate of exchange. This system was commenced by a few of the governments in 1828, since then, it has been joined by all the states of the empire, except Austria, Holstein, Hanover, Mecklenburg-Strelitz, and the free cities of Bremen, Hamburg, and Lubeck. Commerce is greatly facilitated by the numerous navigable rivers, all of which are traversed by steam-packets, and by an excellent system of railways, which in 1849, extended to 3,000 miles.

For 9 centuries previous to 1792, Germany formed an empire governed by a sovereign, elected by the different states. For the purposes of administration, the empire was divided into 10 circles, and comprised, besides the kingdom of Bohemia, the margravate of Moravia and the duchy of Silesia; its cap. was Vienna. The diet or general assembly of the empire, which was composed of three colleges, was convoked by the Emperor; he was assisted in the administration of affairs by the Aulic council, which exercised the functions of the supreme court of the empire. The conquests of the French, and the annexation of Belgium & the other countries on the l. b. of the Rhine to France, led to the dissolution of the empire in 1806. This was replaced temporarily by the Confederation of the Rhine, which had for its object, mutual assistance and the maintenance of peace among the confederate parties, who consisted of the kings of Bavaria and Würtemberg, and several petty sovereigns. The Confederation was estab. at Paris 12th July 1806, under the protection of Napoleon. Its territory was from time to time considerably augmented, till its dissolution in 1813. In 1815, the congress of Vienna established the Germanic Confederation, composed of all the states of Germany, who formed an alliance to secure the integrity of their laws & their respective territories, and to maintain the peace and order of the whole. The different states contributed to the military force in proportion to their pop. The confederation was represented by an assembly, called the Diet, composed of deputies from the different states, the seat of which was at Frankfort on the Main. This state of matters continued till 1848, when in consequence of revolutionary movements, the governments of most of the German states were changed. On 31st March, 500 deputies held a preliminary assembly at Frankfort, for the formation of a Germanic parliament, which held its first sitting on 18th May, and elected a president, and on the following day the Archduke John of Austria was elected regent or vicar of the empire; he was installed on the 12th July, on which day the diet held its seventy-first, and last sitting.

GERMERSHEIM, Vicus Julius, a fortified town of Rhenish Bavaria, on the Rhine, at the influx of the Queich, 8 m. S.S.W. Spires. Pop. 2,200, employed in fishing, river navigation, and rural industry. Near it are the remains of the castle Friedrichsbühl, in which the Emperor Rudolph of Hapsburg died, A. D. 1291.

GERNSHACH, a town of W. Germany, grand duchy Baden, circ. Middle Rhine, cap. dist., on the Murg, 17 m. S.W. Carlsruhe. Pop. 2,265. Near it is the castle of Eberstein.

GEROLSTEIN, a town of Rhenish Prussia, reg. and 34 m. N. Treves, with mineral baths. P. 720.

GERNSREIM, a town of Germany, Grand Duchy Hessen-Darmstadt, prov. Starkenburg, on the Rhine, 11 m. S.W. Darmstadt. Pop. 2,843. It is named in annals dating as far back as 773, and has a castle, and a remarkable town-hall.

GEROLZHOFEN, a town of Bavaria, circ. Lower Franc., on an afl. of the Mayn, 20 m. N.E. Würzburg. Pop. 2,160. Large cattle markets.

GERONA, Gerunda, a city of Spain, cap. prov. of same name, on the Ter, at the confl. of the Oña, 52 m. N.E. Barcelona. Pop. (1845) 7,661. It stands below the fortified height of Monjuiz, its only remaining out-work. Town partly enclosed by walls, is well-built and clean, but dull. Principal edifices, the cathedral, a fine and conspicuous building of the 14th century, the college church of San Felice, the Capanchin convent, with an Arab. bath, the diocesan school, with a large library, several hospitals, and nine convents.

Gerona has manufs. of coarse woollen and cotton goods, hosiery, soap and paper, but little trade. It was erected into a bishopric by Charlemagne, and is the seat of an ecclesiastical tribunal, a sub-deleg. of police, and a military governor. It has been several times blockaded, especially by Philip v. in the war of the succession, and in 1809 by the French under Augereau, who lost 15,000 men here in seven months.

GERONIMO (SAN), a small town of S. America, New Granada, prov. and 16 m. S.E. Antioquia.

GERREANS, a pa. of Engl., co. Cornwall, at the head of St Mawe's harbour, 7 m. S.S.W. Tregony. Area 2,470 ac. Pop. 816.

GERRESHEIM, a town of Rhenish Prussia, reg. and 4 m. E. Düsseldorf, with a station on the railway thence to Elberfeld. Pop. 1,090.

GERRI, Aceris, a market town of Spain, prov. and 59 m. N.E. Lerida, on the Noguera. Near it are valuable salt springs. Pop. 519.

GERRON, or GARRON, a conspicuous headland of Ireland, Ulster, co. Antrim, on the Irish Sea, between Glenarm and Red Bays, 6 m. N. Glenarm. It has a coast-guard and fishing station.

GERSE, a river of France, rises in the Pyrenées, about 20 m. E. Tarbes, flows N.ward through the depts. H. Pyrenées, Gers, and Lot-et-Garonne; and joins the Garonne near Agen, after a course of 75 m. It is innavigable. Auch and Lectoure are the principal towns on its banks.

GERS, a dep. in the S.W. of France, formed of a part of the old prov. Gascogne, bounded N. by the depts. Lot-et-Garonne, E. Tarn-et-Garonne and H. Garonne, S. and S.W. H. and B. Pyrenées, W. Landes. Area 2,416 sq. m. Pop. (1846) 314,885. Surface mostly covered with ramifications of the Pyrenées. Climate temperate. Principal rivers, the Gers, Save, Gimone, Baise, and Adour, all having a N. course. Much of this dep. consists of heaths and waste land. Soil infertile, and scarcely enough corn is raised for home consumption. Wine is produced much beyond consumption, and a good deal of it is converted into Armagnac brandy. Many mules are reared for the Spanish markets; poultry and hogs are numerous. Mining and manufs. are unimportant, and the trade is chiefly in rural produce with the neighbouring depts. and Spain. Gers is divided into five arronds.; principal towns, Auch, Condom, Lectoure, Lombez, and Mirande.

GHENT (French Gand), a famous fortified city of Belgium, cap. prov. E. Flanders, at the confl. of the Scheldt and Lys, on the railway from Ostend to Cologne, and at the head of a branch railway to Paris by Lille, 30 m. W.N.W. Brussels. Lat. 51° 3' 12" N., lon. 3° 43' 51" E. Pop. (1845) 112,810. It is enclosed by walls 7 or 8 m. in circumference; is entered by 7 gates; and is intersected by numerous canals, dividing it into 26 isls., which are connected by 70 bridges, & mostly bordered with fine quays. Streets generally wide; it has 13 squares, & many noble public & private edifices. Principal structures, the buildings of the university, founded in 1816, having a library of 60,000 vols., and a theatre for 1,700 students; the cathedral, with a tower 289 feet in height, and, like many other churches here, rich in paintings of the Flemish school; the belfry, the church of St Michael, containing the famous "crucifixion" by Van Dyck; the Grand Béguinage, a convent of vast extent, inhabited by 600 nuns; the site of the palace, in which the Emperor Charles v. was born, marked by the new street Cour des Princes; the town-hall, great model-prison, new citadel, cavalry barracks, theatre, 22 public hospitals, and the remains of the castle in which John of Gaunt (or Ghent) was born, now used for a cotton factory. In the Friday mkt.-place (Vrydag's Market) many thousands perished in the fires of the Inquisition under the Duke of Alva. Near it is the largest piece of cannon in Europe. Ghent is an archbishop's see, the residence of the military commandant for Flanders, and the seat of a chamber of commerce, of the high tribunals of the prov., & has numerous superior academies, schools, & charitable establishments. It has an active bustling appearance, and has always been important as an emporium of trade. In 1834 there were said to be in the city from 200 to 250 looms wrought by steam; about 19,000 hands were engaged in bleaching, cotton printing, and thread factories, &c., within a circ. of 9 m. Lace making, and woollen, silk, and linen manufs., are next in importance; sugar refineries employ from 10 to 12 million lbs. of raw material; and distilling, brewing, tanning, salt-refining, with manufs. of soap, sail-cloth, oil-cloth, gold and silver stuffs, haberdashery, chemical products, cutlery, machinery, &c., are extensively carried on. Ghent has some good ship-building docks; is connected by ship canals with Bruges and Termonde; and it enjoys a large trade in agricultural produce, with a very active transit trade. This city was pillaged by the Danes under Hastings, when repulsed from England in the time of Alfred; in the 16th century it was the cap. of Austrian Flanders; and under the French, from 1793 to 1814, the cap. of the dep. Scheldt. A treaty of peace between Engl. & the United Provs. was concluded here in 1814. Louis xviii. took refuge in Ghent in 1815.

GHUZNEE, or GHIZNI, a famous fortified city of Afghanistan, on the W. extremity of a hill range, elevation 7,726 feet, 80 m. S.S.W. Cabool. Lat. 33° 34' N., lon. 68° 18' E. Pop. (excluding garrison) variously estimated from 3,000 to 10,000. It stands on a scarped rock, 280 feet above the adjacent plain on its W. side; and its walls about 35 feet in height, and flanked with numerous towers, form an irregular square about 1½ m. in circumference; the whole being enclosed by a fausse-braye and a wet ditch. In the N.E. part of the town is the citadel, with a palace, magazine, & granary; the whole city is, however, commanded by adjacent heights. From its elevated position the winter cold is intense; from 10° to 20° below zero. It has several bazaars, and is an entrepôt for the trade between Afghanistan and the Punjab. Old Ghuznee, destroyed in the 12th century, is about 3 m. N.E.; its ruins cover an extensive space, and here are 2 fine minarets, and the tomb of Mahmood of Ghuznee, whence the famous "gates of Somnath" were removed in 1842. Under the dynasty of Mahmood of Ghore, and his father Subcutaghin, about the beginning of the 11th century, Ghuznee was the cap. of an empire, reaching from the Ganges to the Tigris, and from the Jaxartes to the Indian Ocean. It was stormed and taken by the British under Lord Keane, July 23, 1839; in 1842 the garrison surrendered it to the Afghans, but it was retaken in the same year by the troops under General Nott.—Ghuznee River, rises about 12 m. N. Ghuznee, and enters Lake Ab-istada, after a S. course, estimated at 60 m. Near Ghuznee, which it passes on the E., it was embanked in the 11th century by Mahmood of Ghuznee, whose bund, though much damaged by the Ghore sovereigns, is still fit for the purp. of irrigation.

GIBELLINA, a vill. of Sicily, cap. cant., intend. and 30 m. E.S.E. Trapanè. Pop. 5,300.

GIBRALEON, a town of Spain, prov. and 8 m. N. Huelva, on l. b. of the Odiel. Pop. 2,704. It has several churches and convents, an ecclesiastical tribunal, a custom-house, public granary, and an ancient palace of the Dukes of Bejar.

GIBALTAR, a strongly fortified seaport town & colony of Great Britain, near the S. extremity of Spain, where it occupies a mntnous promontory, E. of its bay, and on the N. side of the Strait of Gibraltar, at the entrance of the Mediterranean, 60 m. S.E. Cadiz. Lat. of the Mole 36° 7' 3" N., lon. 5° 21' 2" W. Mean temp. of year 67°.4; winter 57°.9; summer 77°.8. The celebrated rock (ancient Mons Calpe, one of the "pillars of Hercules"), forms a promontory connected with the continent by an isthmus of sand, and consists of a mass of grey limestone or marble, containing numerous caves, and about 3 m. in length N. to S., by from ½ to ¾ m. in breadth; it rises abruptly to 1,600 feet above the sea, on all sides except the W., on which the town of Gibraltar is built. It is everywhere fortified by works of amazing strength and extent; and besides these there are two galleries excavated in the rock, 2 m. in length, and of sufficient width to admit carriages; at its S. extremity, Europa Point, are a signal-house and a new light-house. Surface parched in dry weather, but after rain covered with vegetation; it is inhabited by a race of monkeys held in high veneration, and the only species of that animal to be found native in any part of Europe. The town is built on its W. side, which shelves down to the bay; and here the fortifications have latterly been greatly improved & strengthened. Pop. (excluding garrison) about 15,000. The principal street is 1 m. in length, well built, paved, and lighted, and many other thoroughfares have been widened of late; but the houses generally are unsuited to the climate, being constructed like those of England, and unfurnished with open courts and galleries, as in the Spanish town San Roque, 5 m. N.W. Principal edifices, the governor's house (attached to which are gardens), the admiralty, naval hospital, victualling office, barracks, cathedral, a modern semi-Moorish structure; and in the mkt.-place, the exchange, with a library, club & news-rooms. Here are a Roman Catholic church, Wesleyan chapel, and synagogue, and various subscription schools. Outside of the "south port" are the esplanade, the English cemetery, and a suburban residence of the governor. The harbour is good, and protected by two moles, one 1,100 and the other 700 feet in length. Gibraltar was made a free port in 1704, and its trade is still considerable, though it has latterly suffered from the rivalry of Malta, Genoa, &c. Value of imports from Great Britain (1840) 111,000*l.* Public rev. collected in the town about 30,000*l.* Annual expense of garrison to Great Britain 200,000*l.* This town derives its name (Gib-el-Tarik, "mntn. of Tarik") from its Moorish founder Tarik, or Tarif, who lived early in the 8th century. It was ceded to Spain by the Moors in 1462, and taken by the English, under Sir G. Rooke, in 1704. Under Lord Heathfield it withstood successfully a memorable siege by the French and Spaniards in 1782.—II. (Bay of), an inlet of the Mediterranean, near the S. extremity of Spain, Andalusia, between the rock of Gibraltar on the E., and Cape Carnero on the W. Length and breadth about 6 m. each; greatest depth 110 fathoms. It is well sheltered and admirably adapted for shipping. GLASGOW, a city and parliamentary borough of Scotland, lower ward of Lanarkshire, on the Clyde, 43 m. W. of Edinburgh, in lat. 55° 51' N., lon. 4° 17' W. Pop. in 1801, 83,769; in 1841, 274,533. The city is built on a gentle declivity, sloping towards the bank of the riv., where 3 large stone, & a wooden bridge, communicate with the suburb of the Gorbals, on the l. b. The leading streets, Gallowgate, Trongate, and Argyle street, run in a continuous line of 2 m. parallel with riv., while num. other streets diverge on both sides. N.W. of Argyle Street are numerous squares and crescents, with many splendid streets and mansions, the residences of the more opulent citizens. Length of city 4½ m.; breadth 2 m. The most ancient part of the town is on an elevated ground to the N.E., where stands the cathedral of St Mungo, a fine old Gothic structure, supposed to have been founded in 1136 by Achains, bishop of Glasgow, & bearing marks in its architecture of various dates of erection; length 319 ft.; height of tower & spire 225 ft. The choir of the cathed. is still used as a place of worship, and a curiously arched crypt below, once used as a chnrch, is now converted into a cemetery. S.W. of the cathedral, in the High Street, is the university, founded in 1450 by Pope Nicholas v. It is well endowed, ann. income about 20,000l., & consists of a chancellor, rector, dean, principal, 8 college professors, & 14 regius professors; a library with 59,000 vols., a museum founded by Dr W. Hunter, and an average number of 950 students. Connected with the university is an astronomical observatory, and there is also a botanic garden in N.W. suburbs. The Andersonian university, founded 1795, is for the popular diffusion of science and literature among all classes of the community. Besides these, there are a faculty of physicians and surgeons, a mechanics' institute, high school, 2 normal schools, an athenæum, and numerous private seminaries of education. Charitable institutions, a royal infirmary, lunatic asylum, blind asylum, deaf and dumb institution, town's hospital for the poor, Hutchison's hospital for education of boys, and house of refuge. The jail, court-house, &c., are comprised in a large square building W. end of the Green, a large bridewell in Duke Street, a commodious police office, with a most efficient body of police. There are 4 banks and several bank agencies in the city; a chamber of commerce and an elegant royal exchange erected in Queen Street in 1829; 2 theatres, a city hall, co. building, merchant ho., trades' ho., custom ho., western and union club houses, barracks, and several monuments and statues adorning the streets and squares. The royalty, originally embracing one parish, is now divided into 10; and including the barony & suburbs, other 18, including quoad sacra pas. Principal churches, St George's, St Enoch's, St Andrew's, St John's, St David's, and the Catholic chapel. There are 30 Free churches, 19 United Presbyterian, 4 Independent, 5 Baptist, and 7 other congregations, 4 Methodists, a Unitarian, 4 Episcopal, and 4 Roman Catholic. Glasgow is supplied with water obtained from the Clyde and from springs in the vicinity, by 2 water companies. There are 2 large gas works; and many of the manufacturers supply their own gas. The Green, on the N. bank of the river, forms an extensive airing ground of 100 ac.; and E. of the cathedral is a very picturesque necropolis, with 3 other cemeteries in the vicinity. Numerous railways communicate with the surrounding districts, & the Clyde affords great facilities for steam-boat conveyance. The Broomielaw harbour extends W. from Jamaica Street along the river, and ships of large tonnage come up to the first bridge. The riv. is now deepened, so as to admit ships of 2,000 tons. The wharfs and docks afford extensive accommodation for vessels of every description. Revenue of harbour (1771) 1,044*l.*, (1820) 6,328*l.*, (1848) 60,600*l.* Glasgow is celebrated as the great Scottish emporium of trade and manufactures. It was here that Watt first began his improvements on the steam-engine, & in the Clyde the first steam-boat, the "Comet," was launched in 1812. The number and tonnage of vessels owned at Glasgow was—in 1811, 55 vessels, 2,620 tons; 1830, 217 vessels, 39,432 tons; 1848, 511 vessels, 136,686 tons. Customs rev. for the same years respectively—3,124*l.*, 72,053*l.*, & 610,978*l.* In 1848, the aggreg. tonnage of sailing and steam-vessels which entered and sailed from the port was 1,175,526 tons. The trade of Glasgow rose into importance about the middle of last century, and consisted chiefly of American and W. Indian commerce, embracing nearly a half of the whole British tobacco trade. Since then the manuf. of cotton goods has risen to a great extent, as also woollens and silks, glass and stone ware, large chemical manufactures, with premises occupying 10 ac., and a celebrated chimney 450 feet high, and 40 feet diameter at the base; iron foundries, and machinery of all kinds, especially steam-engines. In 1846 there were 141 iron furnaces in the vicinity, & 600,000 tons of iron sold. The ann. consumption of coal, chiefly from pits in the vicinity, is estim. at nearly 2 mill. tons, and 250,000 tons exported. Glasgow was early distinguished for its superior letter-press printing, and its Foulis' edition of the classics & other books. It publishes at present 2 daily newspapers, & about 12 others, at various intervals. There are three large suburbs connected with the city, and containing a pop. of 97,000;

Gorbals on the l. b. of the river, Calton forming the E. suburb, & Anderston the W.; these three are boroughs of barony. Port Dundas, an extensive suburb, is immediately to the N., on elevated ground, where is the terminus of the Forth & Clyde canal. Mean annual temp. 49°.8 Fahr. Mean annual fall of rain 32 inches. Of the estimated pop. of 1846, 333,100, there were 10,854 deaths, being 1 to 30.6. The Romans had a station on the river Clyde in the locality of Glasgow, which they retained till the year 426. Antoninus' wall commenced a few miles W. of the city. In 560, the see of Glasgow is said to have been founded by Kentigern or St Mungo; about the year 1115 the see was refounded by David, Prince of Cumberland. Glasgow was first erected into a burgh of regality by William the Lion, 1180. Towards the end of the 15th century it was converted into an archbishopric, & in 1611 into a royal burgh. Rev. of police and statute labour trust, about 60,000*l.* per ann. The city is divided into 16 dists., each sending 3 members to its council, governed by a Lord Provost, 8 bailies, 39 councillors, a dean of guild, deacon, convener, and treasurer. Annual income of burgh (1848) 19,267*l.* It is the seat of sheriff, burgh, and co. courts. It sends 2 members to H. of C. Reg. electors (1848) 12,154.

Monmouth. Area 1,258 sq. m., or 805,120 ac., of which about 750,000 are grass and arable. Inhabited houses 81,016. Pop. 431,383. It has 3 natural divisions; the E. being the Cotswold Hills, varying in height from 200 to upwards of 1,000 feet, and now mostly enclosed and arable; the middle forming the fertile valley of the Severn and its affls.; and the division W. of the Severn, consisting mostly of the Forest of Dean. Chief rivs., the Severn, Upper & Lower Avon, Wye, and Isis. In the hills, sheep farming is the chief branch of industry; the number of sheep is estimated at 600,000, and the annual produce of wool at 16,000 packs. The vale of the Severn, once famous for vineyards, is now equally so for its corn-lands, orchards, gardens, & especially its rich pastures, in which is produced the celebrated Gloucester cheese. The forest produces fine oak timber, excellent perry and the Styre apple cider. Average rent of land (1810) 20s. per acre. Annual value of land (1842-3) 1,121,124£. Chief minerals, coal and iron ore, extensively worked in the forest dist. Value of mines 21,448£. Manufs., besides those of Bristol, consist chiefly of the light, and also of the finest kinds of woollen cloth; the latter are generally preferred to those of Yorkshire; but the trade is not increasing. [STROUP.] In 1838 the co. had 97 woollen factories, employing about 5,500 hands, and cotton factories, employing 1,530 hands. Gloucestershire is divided into 29 hundreds, comprising about 350 pas. in the diocese of Gloucester and Bristol. Chief cities and towns, Gloucester, Bristol, Cheltenham, Stroud, and Cirencester. Railways connect the co. town with Birmingham, via Cheltenham and Worcester; with Bristol, with Dean-Forest, and with London, by junction at Swindon with the Great Western railway. A canal, via Stroud, connects the rivs. Thames and Severn; another connects the cities of Gloucester and Hereford; and a third, 18 m. in length, by enabling large vessels to avoid the dangerous navigation of the Severn, brings them up to the city of Gloucester. The co. sends 6 members to H. of C., 2 are for its E. division, 2 for its W., & 2 for its bors. Reg. electors (1848) for E. division 7,803; for W. division 7,601.

GRAMPAINS, a celebrated mntn. chain in Scotl., forming the natural rampart which separates the Highlands from the Lowlands. Their limits, owing to numerous parallel ridges and scarcely connected branches, are difficult to define, but they may be said to stretch from the W. coast of Argyleshire & Dumbartonshire N.E.ward across the island, terminating on the E. and N.E. coasts of the cos. Aberdeen and Banff, in 2 branches running on each side of the river Dee. This mountain chain is composed of granite, porphyries, primary schists, quartz, and marble. General aspect wild and rugged, especially on the N. side; on the S. acclivity the slopes are gentler, the pasture finer, and the numerous defiles which indent the range often present scenes of the most romantic beauty. The streams flowing from the N. side are mostly affls. of the Findhorn, Spey, Don, and Dee; those on the S. join the Forth, Tay, and S. Esk. The loftiest summits are Ben Nevis, Ben Macdhu, Cairngorm, Cairntoul, Schichallion, Ben Aven, Ben Lawers, Ben More, and Ben Lomond; the altitudes of which are given under their respective heads.—II. a mntn. range of Australia, Victoria, stretching crescent-wise N. and S., between lat. 36° 52' and 37° 38' S., and lon. 142° 25' and 142° 47' E., bounding E.ward the basin of the Glenelg and its affls. GRANA, a vill. of Piedmont, div. Alessandria, prov. and 10 m. S. Casale. Pop. 1,363.

GRANADA, an old prov. and formerly a kgdm. of Spain, Andalucia, bounded E. by Murcia, S. the Mediterranean, and on other sides the provs. of Sevilla, Cordova, and Jean, now divided into the provs. Granada, Almeria, and Malaga. Area 9,622 sq. m. Pop. (1833) 234,789. Surface mostly mntnous.; the Sierra Nevada traverses its centre, and rises in Mulhacen to 11,660 feet in height. Principal rivers, the Genil, Guadaljore, Nacimento, and Almanzora. The hill-sides are covered with forests of oak, cork, chesnut, and pine, & in the valleys tropical, as well as European products are cultivated. The Moorish system of irrigation is still retained, but the corn grown is insufficient for home consumption, and it is imported from Africa. The hemp of Granada is among the finest known. Mineral products comprise excellent marble, alabaster, serpentine, jasper, iron, and lead. Manufs. are confined to a few woollen, cotton, and linen stuffs, paper, & leather; anchovy and tunny fisheries are prosecuted on the coasts. Principal cities, Granada, Malaga, Almeria, Ronda, Antequera, and Velez-el-Blanco. The kingdom of Granada, the last possession of the Moors in Spain, was conquered by Ferdinand and Isabella in 1492.

GRANADA, Illiberis, a city of Spain, cap. of a prov., and formerly of a kingdom, and the anc. metropolis of the Moors in Spain, on the Genil, at the influx of the Darro, 120 m. E.S.E. Sevilla. Lat. 37° 16' N., lon. 3° 45' 43" W. Pop. (1845) 70,025 (in the time of the Moors it is said to have had half a million inhabitants). It stands partly on the edge of a plain, and partly on mntn. spurs, progressively rising to the Alhambra. It has a most picturesque appearance, still entirely resembling a Mohammedan city, with its crenated walls, terraced gardens, domes, minarets, fountains, old mosques, flat-roofed houses, and projecting balconies. It is irregularly laid out, and badly paved. Chief public edifices, the cathedral, a large and richly decorated edifice, adjacent to which is the chapel of the kings of Spain, with the tombs of Ferdinand and Isabella, 23 pa. churches, all adorned with rich marbles & other works of art, and several convents. The Alhambra (al-hamara "the red"), or anc. palace of the Moorish kings, is an irregular mass of houses & towers on a commanding height, surrounded by groves, and of which the bastioned walls, arches, halls of the Abencerrages and Ambassadors, court of lions, meznita, & the unfinished palæe of Charles v., are the portions most worthy of notice. Granada has a university, 6 colleges, academies of mathematics & design, several hospitals, manufs. of silks and hats, paper mills, royal nitre and gunpowder factories, and some trade in oil, &c. Its prosperity suffered greatly—first, on its being wrested from the Moors in 1492, and next, by the separation from Spain of her Indian possessions. Its principal law-courts also were removed to Albacete in 1835. Around it are numerous fine public walks and objects of interest, the principal of which is the Soto de Roma, or "wood of pomegranates;" also a very rich Carthusian convent. (See Murray's Handbook for Spain, pp. 376-394).

GRANADA, a city of Central Amer., state and 30 m. N.N.W. Nicaragua, on the N.W. shore of the lake. Pop. 10,000. (?) It is well built, having handsome streets and public edifices; the latter comprise several fine churches. It is the seat of a flourishing trade in cacao, indigo, Nicaragua wool, & hides, which are exported in flat-bottomed boats by the lake and river San Juan, to the harb. of San Juan del Norte, Caribbean Sea.

GRANADA (NEW), one of the republics of S. America, mostly between the equator and lat. 12° N., and lon. 68° and 82° W., having E. Venezuela, S. Ecuador, W. the Pacific, N. the Caribbean Sea, and N.W. the Central Amer. state Costa Rica. Its territory comprises the isthmus of Darien. Estimated area 369,600 sq. m., and pop. (1838) 1,686,000. The Andes, near the Ecuador frontier, diverge into three cordilleras, which traverse the W. and settled half of New Granada, from S. to N., enclosing the basins of its principal rivers the Artata, Magdalena, and Cauca; on N.E. the Meta and Guaviare, tributaries of the Orinoco, flow mostly through this territory. Besides the great lake of Maracaybo, there are many other lakes, N. and W. the mntns. The declivities of the Central Andes appear to be much less productive than other parts of this region; on the summits of the ranges are paramos, or extensive table-lands, nearly without vegetation; the lands along the Caribbean Sea are fertile, but unhealthy; almost all the W. parts are covered with dense forests, and yield all kinds of tropical productions. In the S.E. are wide llanos, or plains, pasturing innumerable herds of cattle and horses. Climate varies greatly with elevation;

in some parts of the W. rains and excessive heat prevail. The uplands produce wheat and other European grains; maize, tobacco, plantains, cotton, cacao, and some sugar are raised in the river, basins, and along the coasts. Braziletto cedar, mahogany, cinchona bark, & fustic woods, ipecacuanha and balsam of Tolu, are other vegetable products. The plains yield large supplies of jerked beef and hides. Gold is found in the Andes and the sands of the Cauca; platinum along the Pacific; silver, copper, iron, tin, lead, emeralds, and rock-salt, at Zipaquirá and Chita; coal near Bogota. Manufs. are limited to coarse woollen and cotton stuffs for home consumption. The average annual value of the trade is estimated at 1,600,000*l.*; in 1844 the imports amounted in value to 880,000*l.*, the exports to 560,000*l.* The imports from England were reported to form 3-5ths of the whole, and to be chiefly composed of cheap cotton and woollen fabrics. In 1846, cotton goods to the value of 140,000*l.*, hardwares to 11,033*l.*, liens to 19,176*l.*, woollens to 27,300*l.*, were imported from Great Britain, the whole imports amounting in value to 219,593*l.*, in return for coffee 7,359,300 lbs., sarsaparilla 47,390 lbs., tobacco 481,300 lbs., and cotton wool 185,491 lbs. The trade with France in 1844 amounted to 130,600*l.*; the imports, consisting of silks & other woven goods, paper, wines, brandy, and perfumery, reached to 1,096,000 francs, and the exports of mother of pearl, dye-woods, raw hides, tortoise-shell, cotton, & cigars, to 1,919,000 francs. The rest of the trade is chiefly with the U. States, Jamaica, Curaçoa, Spain, Venezuela, and Peru. Principal commercial ports are Cartagena, Santa Martha, Panama, and Chagres. The country is divided into the 5 depts. of Cundinamarca, Magdalena, the Isthmus, Cauca, and Boyaca. After the cap. Bogota, the principal towns are Medellin, Mompo, Quibdo, and the ports before-mentioned. Public rev. (1839-40) 2,200,545 dolls. New Granada was discovered by the Spaniards in 1499, and the first settlement was made at the Gulf of Darien in 1510. In 1811 this republic was established; in 1841 the provs. of the isthmus separated from the rest, and subscribed to a constitution of their own, but they have since rejoined the parent state.
